ELECTED TO SUCCEED POINCARÉ WHO DECLINED TO BE CANDIDATE; LONG PROMINENT IN POLITICS

VERSAILLES, Jan. 17.—Paul Deschanel, president of the chamber of deputies, this afternoon was elected president of France by the joint assembly of the senate and chamber. He succeeds Raymond Poincaré. Deschanel has long been a prominent figure in French politics. He was first elected president of the chamber of Deputies in 1899, after a career in minor offices. He served until 1902 and was again elected in 1912. He is a member of the French academy and the academy of sciences and has written extensively on political, social and economic questions. Deschanel was born in 1848.

LEADING CANDIDATES ONCE FOUGHT DUEL

PARIS, Jan. 16.—The fight between M. Clemenceau and M. Deschanel for the presidency recalls that they already met on another field, that of honor, 26 years ago. Then, when Clemenceau was neither a deputy nor a senator, he wrote an article in his newspaper, Le Journal, criticizing M. Deschanel for an intemperate outburst against the Briason ministry on the law against anarchists. M. Deschanel, offended by the tenor of the article, sent his seconds to M. Clemenceau, who was noted as a duelist. The men met with swords and Deschanel received a wound over the eye which was so severe that the seconds would not permit the duel to continue.

"Eight About Face" Policy Provides for Lifting of Blockade on that Country

WAS HUMORED COUNCIL PLANNED MILITARY STEPS

To Give Russian Cooperative Societies Facilities for Importation of Goods

By HENRY WOOD, United Press Staff Correspondent

PARIS, Jan. 17.—The allies today apparently have adopted a completely new attitude toward Russia. The supreme council announced last night in an official communique that the blockade against Russia will be lifted at once. The council's action, in the view of many political observers, constituted a direct about face from its former policy.

The council has decided, according to the communique, to give the Russian cooperative societies facilities necessary to permit importation and distribution of various kinds of goods, such as flour, oil, wood and other Russian products. The announcement followed rumors here that the allied leaders were preparing new active military measures against the Bolsheviks. Both London and Paris observers had believed that, in view of the recent Bolshevik military successes, they were admitted to have renounced British influence in Asia, the new policy would be even more severe than before. The blockading military action with the Bolsheviks.

Instead came news of the lifting of the Russian trade ban. In some quarters it was believed the new policy does not mean any change in the allied attitude toward the Soviet government. The allied leaders, it was pointed out, may have decided to give the cooperative societies directly, ignoring the government.

Some observers even believed it may mean an attempt to bring the Bolsheviks and Trotsky into the general opinion was the power of Lenin and Trotsky is too strong to be shaken by any such move as lifting of the blockade.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WILL BE REOPENED

LONDON, Jan. 17.—Commercial relations will be re-opened between the Allied nations and Russia, it was announced today as a result of a decision reached by the supreme council at Paris yesterday. This step, which reverses the former policy of the Allies toward Russia, does not in any way alter the allied attitude toward the Trotsky-Lenin government, according to the statement issued by the council.

Clothing, medicines, agricultural machinery and other necessities will be shipped into Russia by entente countries which will receive in return grain, flax and other products. Arrangements for the supplies sent to Russia will reach the peasants will be made, it is understood.

Relations between the Allies and Soviet Russia will be a deal of interest to this morning's newspapers. A remarkable statement issued in Paris yesterday and attributed to the British mission there practically completely overturned the official announcement in this city, which accompanied the information that Winston Churchill and his colleagues had gone to Paris, as printed in the Times.

Fire originating in a battery of tanks on the Duke of Dublin Oil company lease, in Block 74, about 8 o'clock Saturday morning, and spreading south, destroyed 10 rigs and about 6,000 barrels of kerosene in the west edge of Block 78 on the east edge of 71, causing a monetary loss of about $140,000, according to reports from the field reaching Wichita Falls early Saturday. The fire, which is supposed to have originated in the ignition of the high-pressure of Dublin tanks becoming ignited from a boiler on a neighboring lease, spread outward to the creek in the southwestern edge of Block 74, igniting the waste oil in this creek and burning the surface oil along the creek, down through 74 to the Texas company Fowler lease on Block 62, igniting itself, however, in the creek bed and burning out without attacking neighboring property after reaching the creek.

The newspaper shortage is becoming acute throughout the United States and Canada. Many newspapers are being compelled to pay exorbitant prices and their worst problem has been to get paper at any price. There have been great advances in the price of paper, even to the most fortunate buyers.

The Times has been successful in contracting for a supply of paper nearly sufficient for its needs in 1920 but its mill, which is located in Canada, may not be able to make shipments on account of restrictions placed upon it by the Canadian paper controller. Aside from its own particular situation, the Times wishes to join in the conservation of newspaper for the benefit of publishers, less fortunately situated and for the public interest. It wishes at the same time to serve the commercial and business interests of Wichita Falls and not to encroach upon its news columns. It therefore calls upon those who advertise to be careful in their use of space and not to use more space than is necessary to fairly present their messages to the public. It believes that if this is done, it will not be necessary for this paper to establish any restrictions upon the use of its columns by its advertisers and that its service to the public as a disseminator of news will not be restricted. It believes advertisers generally are no less interested in the paper problem than the publishers. It believes that cooperation between editors and advertisers can conserve paper to such a degree that newspaper production can catch up with newspaper consumption.

Comedian Whose Rise to Fame Has Been Meteoric

Larry Semon "Put Over" Novel Plan to Win Success in the Movies

Can you imagine the thrills of a movie star acting with and handling wild animals and how they do it? Can you imagine the physical hardships and dangers encountered by stars in the production of a He-Man movie play? And are you aware of the interesting facts concerning the stars' gorgeous wardrobe?—and——How they are selected and their values? Do you know of the possibilities of writing scenarios? How to write and what to write? These are a few of the intensely interesting subjects—fully described and illustrated—that will appear shortly in this paper.

The Architect Who Draws Designs for his own face

DID you ever hear of the cross section of a smile? Or have you ever seen the ground plan of a smile? There are such things in a remarkable library of drawings and blueprints out on the coast. The collection is probably the strangest one in the realm of exact sciences. It may be found in the sanctum of Larry Semon, Vitagraph film comedian at Hollywood, California. Larry is the craftsman who drew all the thousands of face plans. He is the one who puts them into the actual use for which they were made. He applies those drawings to his own face, and literally constructs with his own physiognomy the lines, curves, contours and wrinkles that appear on his design.

When the fullness of his discovery descended on Larry like the proverbial ton of brick, he is reported to have jumped about four feet. "Gosh," he said to himself, "Why am I working my fingers loose for a newspaper when I can knock the world dead with my face?"

There is a story going the rounds that Larry got out of the printers' ink game just barely in time to avoid an untimely grave. The story is that a certain politician, taking a sly at a certain newspaper one day about that time, became very upset at what his eyes beheld; and that he swore to kill Larry on sight. The object of the politician's wrath was that thoroughly undignified cartoon of the latter's treatment of widows and orphans, which bore Larry's signature at its bottom.

Larry is able to lay his hand on any facial design or series he chooses in reference to any question of expression that may arise. For instance should he desire to find the architectural plans of the expressions to be used when one has just been captured in a plot to blow up the jail, kill the warden, make the grand escape, he finds it under a heading like this: "To be sure, mingled with chagrin, remorse, surprise. Second variation is groping for idea, quick scanning of possible means of escape. Third variation is grasping of idea. The eyes express brief relief, then simulation of surrender, to throw captors off guard."

Larry is able to lay his hand on any facial design or series he chooses in reference to any question of expression that may arise. For instance should he desire to find the architectural plans of the expressions to be used when one has just been captured in a plot to blow up the jail, kill the warden, make the grand escape, he finds it under a heading like this: "To be sure, mingled with chagrin, remorse, surprise. Second variation is groping for idea, quick scanning of possible means of escape. Third variation is grasping of idea. The eyes express brief relief, then simulation of surrender, to throw captors off guard."

Larry's "floating" stride is one of the mysteries of comedy "thunder" in the film profession. Many other comedians are reported to have studied it deeply, without being able to reproduce it. The "float" is brought into especially notable play on such occasions as when Larry is thrown off of a cliff, and lands on the ground hundreds of feet below. The comedian often lands on his back and bounces gracefully upward for fifteen feet, turning a somersault in the air, landing again on his feet, and floating heels over head backwards twenty feet away. He seems on such occasions to be constructed of rubber.

Larry's success as comedian resulted recently in his signing of a contract with Mr. Smith for a three-year period at what is declared an enormous salary. News of this event was coupled pretty generally with press comments on the fact that the comedian had so long ago was just a plain cartoonist. The idea aroused speculation among paragraphs upon the oddity of this suggested by the extremes of cartoonist and comedian meeting in one man. Larry's old associates along Park Row and Herald Square received the news with wonderment. "How did he do it?" was the general chorus. The thing seemed incredible. This article is designed largely to answer the foregoing question. From the facts submitted here, it will be seen that Larry did it with his little pen and pencil.

What Does Cinema Hold Out for Ambitious Boys?

WOULD I advise a boy to aspire to direct or act in motion pictures? Yes, if he feels strongly that he has something to express that the world will want to know, and he believes it can be expressed through such a medium. No, if he is merely looking around for an easy vocation that promises to pay him more than he earns or to give him a vast scope.

The best evidence of my sincerity in saying that the cinema holds out great chances for the right kind of boys is the way I bring the matter to my own door. I have a boy that is coming down the stretch toward young manhood. At one time I would have advised him to shut the actors' profession because its hardships and temptations were still sharply remembered, and I did not consider the question of duty to self or the world. But now I would like to have him become one of the makers of the motion pictures because of the tremendous influence they are going to have in shaping the ideals of the world. But only if he has vision and a sense of responsibility, mind you. If he hasn't these he might better be a good plumber or chauffeur. The merely technical part is not hard to learn. There is no way to tell a boy how to knock on the door of opportunity, or how to find it. He must find it for himself in this field as in others. Perhaps he may have to make great sacrifices to reach it; he may have to rob himself of the playtime that other boys demand, or he may have to subsist on crusts of bread in order to be on the spot ready for the door to open. If he has this kind of stamina, the cinema wants him. It will not deny him a chance. The world does not deny the demands of him who will not take no for an answer. Let him approach the studio this way, with a willingness to take any job, however humble, in order to get a start and the rest will take care of itself. There is no royal road, and if there were it would not be good for him. We have a phrase, "Come on in; the water's fine." So I say to ambitious boys: "Come on in, there is room for boys with good stuff in them in our vocation and to that kind it will provide a means of noble expression and perhaps a road to fame. The recent death of Andrew Carnegie reminded Tom Santachi, the popular leading man with the Cathwind (correct) Curtis company, of his one and only meeting with the late steel magnate. "It was while I was still a young man and had temporarily taken a job in the West Philadelphia yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company," is the way Mr. Santachi tells it. "Mr.

Carnegie, who was a stranger to me, was walking through the yards one day on his way to the private car of A. J. Cassatt, at that time president of the road. "I was engaged in cleaning a car at the time, and had the hose turned on it when Mr. Carnegie passed by and said to me, 'Well, young man, I see you are busy.' " "Oh," I replied, "I am only waiting a little of the rolling stock." "Now, I contend that this bit of repartee should at least have won me a boost in pay, but Mr. Carnegie just smiled as he walked away."

Mutilation of Motion Pictures by Unscrupulous Exhibitors

Public Is Growing Tired of Having the Films Slashed Ruthlessly in Order That the Theaters Can Fill and Empty Quickly. Creative Writers Fail to See Opportunities That Movies Offer. Why?

THE mutilation of motion pictures by unscrupulous exhibitors, who are more interested in bringing the big crowds to their theaters and then getting them out quickly so the theater can fill quickly, is a subject which promises to be dealt with the public in the near future. In other words, the public is tired of having the films slashed in order that more shows can be held daily.

Reading a news paragraph the other day to the effect that a famous star producer of pictures intended to discipline exhibitors who cut down film plays to meet time requirements, Frank Lloyd, the director of many pictures, said, "Allah be praised," or words to that effect.

The news item said that Miss Pickford did not intend to stand for such mutilation; now that she had something to say as to who should have her films.

"It is a common practice," said Lloyd, "for theater managers in the smaller towns, who are more concerned about the number of shows than the quality of shows, to apply the shears ruthlessly to photoplays that the producer, director and film editor have labored over with great care."

The situation is intolerable. Fancy a stage production coming out from the country from New York and theater managers expecting the right to lop off the fourth act or take a piece out of each act so that they could show two performances in an evening.

The reputation of directors and the financial safety of producers have been put on the chopping block in this way, and there has been no redress. Authors have been made to appear to have written sheer rubbish by the shears that left in their stories, and actors have been made to do perplexing things.

and do more harm than good to the general trend of the story.

Marshall Neilan is one of the younger directors, and one of the successful producers in the presentation of "heart interest stuff," as they call it in the film vernacular. His expression on the matter will undoubtedly prove of interest. "In staging a photoplay we are only too apt to overlook the little notes of human appeal in our eagerness to bring out the big situations of the story," says Mr. Neilan. "To my mind, it is just as important to accent the little every-day touches of life as it is to present the high lights of the plot."

Frank E. Woods, supervision director of Paramount productions, who has the remarkable record of having written, selected, scenarized or supervised a total of nearly 400 filmed stories in the decade since he left journalism to devote his gifts to the movies, said some interesting things the other day about the "happy ending"—the denouement, in which the lovers "clinch" and all ends merry as a marriage bell.

Every story for motion picture production must necessarily contain a wealth of interest compelling situations and every care must, of course, be taken to get the most out of these situations. At the same time, a study of the most popular motion picture will disclose the fact that the human note played an important part in achieving their success. One of our most successful films now being shown—a heavy dramatic story—uses various situations with a little lane boy and these scenes are among the most popular discussed features of the production.

It is true that there has been too much promiscuous placing of close-ups in pictures of cute babies and animals in the hurried effort of bidding for human appeal. If there is evident a lack of human interest material, the scenario should be changed to allow for the logical presentation of a theme that will offset the dramatic tenacity of the plot. For instance, "The River's End," adapted from James Oliver Curwood's wonderful book of the same name, is a stirring dramatic story. The story in both form is a wonderful success, yet in producing it for the screen it is necessary to inject a light theme to offset a visualization of contrast on the screen.

This boy can creep into the hearts of his audiences because he possesses that inexplicable something that typifies the boyhood we or our brothers, friends or son, have lived through. In presenting him in scenes, there is as much attention paid to his little situations as there is to the features of the plot.

The Unending Cry for More Scenarios

MORE Stories! More Stories! The great maw of the Movies is always unassisted. It has always been so and apparently will always be so, because the universality of the motion picture will make the demand for plots exceed the supply. Why can not our creative writers fail to see the rich rewards that await them in this direction?

Do they not see the immense significance in the fact that the University of California has established a department for the study of scenario writing, and that Columbia University has outlined courses of even larger scope in connection with photoplay making? Why do authors continue to feed the coal mine of the magazine and book field and leave untouched the gold mine of the motion picture field?

depend upon the story entirely for results, but must achieve its purpose through the introduction of incidental action or "gags" which may be entirely foreign to the plot, but nevertheless have a most important bearing on the reception accorded the completed picture.

The creation of the comedy story in the studio brings into consultation many minds trained in devising methods of extracting the elusive giggle and involves the introduction of scores of original bits of action—enough to make a dozen of the stories which are usually submitted as complete comedies and which if produced as written would furnish perhaps a half a dozen laughs in forty minutes. The comedy director must be guided to a certain extent by the location on which he is at work and must devise impromptu action to take advantage of his surroundings.

were in their right minds. It should be understood that the creation of film comedies is a highly specialized branch of the endeavor, and that the best results can only be obtained from those who are thoroughly versed in pictured humor, and thoroughly steeped in its atmosphere. Producers would gladly pay a high price for a comedy scenario with a good story and sufficient novel "gags" to make two reels of fast and funny action, but many years of actual experience has proven to the producers that it is rarely done.

Many writers, especially the new ones, would do well to remember the following pointers when preparing the copy for a screen production:

Write something that is original enough to be different from the usual run of material. Write stories that the companies want—not the kind of stories that happen to please your fancy. Make your stories practical and remember always that the picture game is a business and not an art institute. Study the motion picture market carefully. Don't submit stories blindly. It only consumes your own time and the time of the motion picture editor.

Always make your stories plausible for the impossible far-fetched stories do not represent real life. Write the type of stories that are in demand, heart interest modern stories that reflect our own every-day problems. Please remember, if you can't write a story big enough to compete with the big fiction writers today that you are only wasting your own time and postage in submitting copy.

that we have. This is because the word painting which a conscientious author uses to favor his pictures can be vastly improved in the actual reproduction of natural effect. The photoplay can lead the audience into the heart of the woods, to the top of a mountain, to the edge of the sea, into the clouds if necessary. It can do this better than the author could possibly in words. Therefore so far as magnificent backgrounds to a fine story are concerned the moving picture surpasses the literary flavor of the printed page.

This, of course, is a great step in artistic advancement for the imaginative author, but it has been badly adjusted to other qualities which are necessary in literary construction. The constructive quality of a story written under the spell of literary flavor is the hidden value which the motion picture has often failed to appreciate.

Wants Story to Be Feature Instead of Star. It does look as if at last the author is coming into his own on the screen, and that with the coming of Jack Landon's screen productions the way is shown of how 80 per cent of the previous evils besetting motion pictures can be eradicated. Of these evils, their way and wherefore, Mrs. Ripshart says:

"Due to the antics and so-called personality of certain picture stars whose main object in life seems to lie in the endeavor to thrill and startle an innocent audience, is sometimes an unspokeable exaggeration and grotesque misinterpretation of an entire literary form or field. This should not be considered as a criticism of the actors and actresses, because I think that they deserve far more artistic recognition for the difficult work they do than they have ever received. The art of motion picture acting is very exacting and far more difficult than theatrical work. This is because it is the art of silent expression, which has always been considered a far more difficult form of expression than stage work. Because of this necessity in all motion pictures, I think that there is a great future for literary values in it. Word painting is a very subtle gift, and the nearest other form of the same expression is pantomime. Personally I am in favor of some development of direction in motion pictures that will make the story a greater feature than the star."

"I believe this portends a new era in photoplay expression, an era of artistry untrammelled by shackles of movie conventions as expounded by the actor star, and an era of development of picture directors whose talents may unfold themselves unhampered and according to their lights. The work of featuring authors on the screen seems another step in the right direction. It also opens up a wide and profitable avenue for talented writers, even the inexperienced ones, to study motion pictures, their needs and requirements, and to turn out the stories, the kind of stories, the producers are willing to pay fabulous sums. There is a gold mine for story writers who can deliver. It's worth trying."

Novel, "Fighting Cressy," Produced on Screen

THE story-loving public probably owes as much to Bret Harte as any other American writer, portraying for them the virtue and rugged days of the struggles of the early settlers when the West was young. One of his best-known classics, "Fighting Cressy," has been vivified on the screen, starring Blanche Sweet in the role of "Cressy."

Bret Harte was a prolific writer, and most of his work bears the stamp of genius. He described or invented new types of character and portrayed them and their surroundings with a vivid energy that has no modern counterpart. Generally, he is the strongest in the field of which he is the discoverer; although, in some instances—notably in "Fighting Cressy"—he has produced exquisite romances, sometimes with a pastoral flavor, wholly unlike the turbulence of his early efforts.

Life Was Characteristic of His Work. His command of humor and quiet pathos, his power of vivid description of the rough and picturesque life of the settler and the miner and his gift of turning out graceful as well as humorous verse are outstanding features of his literary fame.

In a law office. At the youthful age of 15 he packed bag and baggage and went to California, becoming in succession a school teacher, apothecary clerk, tutor and express messenger and author.

"Fighting Cressy" might be called a melting pot of his works as there is contained in it all the ruggedness of the Fighting West; all the sweetness of youth and strength; all the quaint humor of a set of strong men fighting their battles for existence; all the struggle of a bare-kneed race for knowledge and what education existed—taken all-in-all it represents young America, red-blooded and fighting for a supremacy which it holds today.

As "Cressy," Blanche Sweet has a role such as she has wished to play for a long time.

"I don't believe I have ever had a role that delighted me so much," said Miss Sweet, "and that's saying a whole lot because I think I've played nearly every type of a feminine part since I have been on the screen. One thing greatly of the more-or-less dignified society type of a woman who merely has to wear stunning gowns and walk through scenes pulling an emotional curtain now and then. Of course that's a rather broad statement, but you know what I mean."

A government bulletin is authority for the statement that the greatest single factor in the operation of the steam plant is the way in which the exhaust steam problem is handled.

Chill claims that the Island of Chile, off its west coast, is the original home of the potato and that it has been cultivated there since early in the sixteenth century.

"I have played in society dramas; I don't believe I have ever had a role that delighted me so much," said Miss Sweet, "and that's saying a whole lot because I think I've played nearly every type of a feminine part since I have been on the screen. One thing greatly of the more-or-less dignified society type of a woman who merely has to wear stunning gowns and walk through scenes pulling an emotional curtain now and then. Of course that's a rather broad statement, but you know what I mean."

costume plays with frills and ruffles, war plays of historical and biblical significance such as 'Judith of Bethulia,' but now comes along the delightful little character of 'Cressy,' which it has been my good fortune to create."

Headline Had Temper and Mind of Her Own. The little daughter of the rough Western settler, who carries a feud-war with his nearest neighbor, is a girl of temper. She is not only a lovable little thing but she has a temper—a temper which bursts out at the slightest provocation and she also has a mind of her own.

When she meets the man she loves she does not surrender herself to him. She realizes that he is of the hated Harrison, her father's enemy, and that he is also her enemy. She gradually weakens when realization comes to her that love is everything and from a tempestuous little miss blossoms forth into beautiful womanhood.

But all in all, 'Cressy' is a dear sweet little girl—a girl with all the fond hopes of youth; a girl with a fiery temper hidden in her breast which is a heritage of her fighting ancestors; a girl, who, with the loss of her head and a glance from her eyes can convey a greater meaning than spoken words; a girl whose whole character undergoes a softening influence with the coming of love.

COFFEE

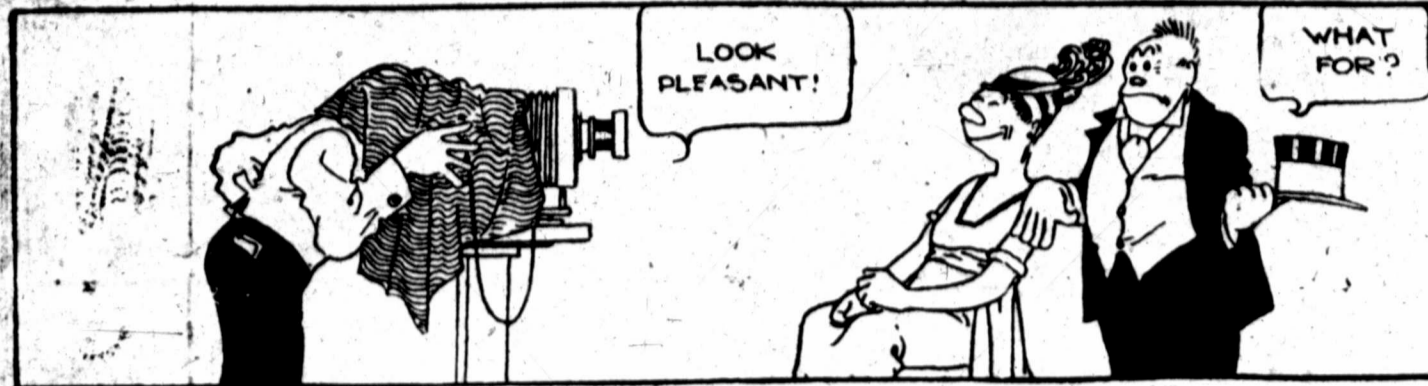

Forty-five years ago, one Shele De Vere, in reviewing the legends, and miracles ascribed to the famous bean, the merits of which a dervish discovered as he watched the effects of the leaves of the plant upon a flock of goats he tended and that were made frisky by eating them. It is told that "they jumped and gambled and bleated in so remarkable a manner that the dervish became envious of their happiness, gathered a few of the leaves, chewed them and felt as merry as his goats." That was the start of the devotion now shown in the civilized world to coffee as its favorite beverage.
