IMMIGRATION BILL MOST SATISFACTORY MEASURE IN YEARS

SENTIMENT SHOWN BY LARGE MAJORITY VOTE IN THE SENATE

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 7.—No one doubts that President Harding will sign the immigration restriction bill. Last summer in the address in which he accepted the republican nomination for the presidency one of the points made by Senator Harding was that in the past he had been too prone to think of immigration merely as the raw material of industry and that in the future he must think of it as material to be assimilated into our social institutions.

PRESIDENT IS EXPECTED TO GIVE HIS APPROVAL

Those who have followed this bill closely have no doubts that the motives which have made its advocates feel strongly about it. Those motives have not always been expressed openly. For one reason, some senators and congressmen have among their constituents racial elements which cause them to hesitate to speak frankly against receiving any more of the same element.

Editorial Echoes

"SHOCKING" ALL AROUND.

(New York Times) "This nation cannot continue to spend at this shocking rate," says Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, pointing out that the annual expenditure of the government during the fiscal year 1922, including interest, will be $4,000,000,000.

Not only is the government's total yearly bill increasing at a shocking rate, but the method by which it attempts to raise the money to meet that charge is likewise shocking. Secretary Mellon retells the old, old story how the yield of the government profits is dwindling, how the surtaxes yield less because of investments in non-taxable securities, how this whole scheme of taxation based on corporate profits is breaking down.

But is the secretary well advised in the recommendations he makes for the revision of the tax laws? He tells congress that the expenditure must be cut down, appropriations rightly restricted. Good advice but nothing will come of it. He recommends the repeal of the excess profits taxes, of course—that was inevitable and it will be an immense relief to business. He recommends that the higher surtaxes be abolished so that the maximum combined normal and surtax should in no case exceed 40 per cent.

Such care was taken to keep this document from anyone except the secretary and the office of naval operations that even the general board retained no duplicate of it. After being submitted to me for approval, it was turned over to the chief of naval operations; all plans that had been approved were in their custody. They were familiar with their provisions and stratified the necessary orders for carrying them into effect. But plans were so carefully safeguarded that only those directly concerned were allowed to see them.

DISAPPEARANCE OF THE BLACK WAR PLAN

The war plan that was lost—Probable solution, Black dealing with naval tactics against Germany in Atlantic waters—Did Germans steal our secrets or were they good guessers?—Probable solution of mystery.

What became of the lost Black plan is still a mystery. Made out by the general board, guarded with the greatest care, handled by the proper authorities, it was carried into effect and then it vanished utterly.

The discovery that one of our secret naval plans was missing came when it was too late to have any effect on the situation. But that did not prevent the newspapers making the most of the sensation, especially such as, for instance, had it in for the navy department.

They would never have heard of it were it not for the fact that it was missing. Had we not looked it up for the purpose of proving to certain clamorous critics that we had not gone to war without plans. Long ago it had served its purpose and was, as we supposed, had been filed away with thousands of other documents for purposes of record. But here we were wrong. The plan had not been filed away, nor could any trace of it be found. To this day it has not been found.

And it was an important plan—at the time it was used. It was a plan of vital importance. Navy's "Black Plan." The navy for many years has had a set of plans to cover possible situations which might develop in the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Caribbean sea or other open waters. These plans originated with the general board, and were approved by the chief of staff, until his death in January, 1917, and were kept up-to-date by frequent revision.

The plan dealing with possible hostilities in the Atlantic was known as the "Black plan." In February, 1917, in its revised and up-to-the-minute form, it dealt, of course, with the probability of war with Germany. On February 4, the day after Bernstorff was dismissed, the general board had recommended in detail the plan that was to be taken in case of war with the central powers—mobilization of the fleet, naval districts and auxiliary vessels; large increase of navy and marine corps personnel; nets and mines to guard ports and home waters against submarines, arming of merchant ships, and other measures.

To: The General Board, Feb. 10, 1917. Subject: Solution of Problem. 1. The department desires the general board to consider the following problem and submit its solution as soon as practicable: PROBLEM. General Situation—Conditions as at present exist that war with Germany is declared.

Special Situation—The allies do not desire our battleship force at present. Required—Naval estimate of the situation. First, as to the grand strategy demanded by the situation. Second, as to disposition of battleship force. Third, as to the method of assisting in maintaining communications with Europe, including scheme for cooperation with allies.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS. The board made a careful study of the whole situation, and a week later made a report covering all the matters set forth, and sent it to me, with the following note of transmittal: Problem is Solved.

General Board, Navy Department, Washington, Feb. 17, 1917. To: Secretary of the Navy. Subject: Solution of Problem, Black. Reference (a) Navy Department Confidential Letter of February 10, 1917. 1. In accordance with reference (a) the general board submits herewith problem and solution based upon the general and special situations described in the navy department's instructions.

by some German spy was given no credence in the department. Nothing was so carefully guarded as war plans, and so far as we know the Germans never got hold of any of ours, although early in the war a number of things occurred which make us wonder how much they did know. For example: Movements of vessels and orders relating thereto were known only to the few officials in the navy department who issued the orders and to the men on the vessels. Great pains were taken to prevent the Germans from learning about the first destroyer sent to Europe. They sailed under sealed orders, and until he was fifty miles at sea and broke the seal, not even the commander of the flotilla knew its destination.

Yet the day before the division arrived, German submarines, for the first time in months, sowed mines all across the entrance to Queenstown, and the German papers printed the news of our destroyers' arrival before it was published in England or America. The latter is more easily accounted for, as it was several days before we announced that they had reached a British port, but the mine laying led many to believe that the enemy had in some way learned they were coming.

When our first troop convoys went to Europe they were attacked far out at sea, and Admiral Sims cabled that it was "practically certain that the enemy knew positions of the first rendezvous and accordingly sent a submarine to intercept before junction with destroyers." Though Sims afterward discounted the idea that the convoys were attacked, he was excited enough about it at the time for he sent two cablegrams about it in three days.

Germany "Doped It Out." But whatever the Germans might have learned about our ship movements on the other side, I am confident that they did not get any information from this side of the Atlantic. The navy had control of all radio, every cable message was scanned and even the destroyer and transport captains did not know their destination until they were well out at sea. My own opinion is that the Germans, who knew of Gen. Pershing's arrival in Europe, did not know the day after our first convoys sailed, inferred that troops were being dispatched and merely "doped out" the probable route. The mine laying at Queenstown was, as likely as not, simply a coincidence.

And so I am satisfied in my own mind that the missing plan, and "Probable Solution, Black," will yet be found carefully—too carefully—hidden away in the navy department. I have never believed it was stolen, or that in any way fell into German hands. The explanation of its vanishing, I think, will be found to be quite simple, and will show that it was due to an oversight to preserve the plan in absolute secrecy.

"As I have said, but one copy was made of it. It was probably given into the care of Capt. Voinsey, chief assistant to Admiral Benson, and a man to whom matters of the utmost importance were frequently committed. Capt. Chase was an exceedingly able and unsparringly devoted officer. It is not unlikely that he put the "Black plan" problem away in some secret drawer or cabinet, confiding in no one as to its whereabouts.

Then, in June, 1917, worn out with almost ceaseless work, he died—died suddenly. So far as we know, the "Black plan" problem was never seen by any one after the death of Capt. Chase. He probably took the secret of its hiding place with him. Carefully no enemy learned it as long as it was locked in his brain.

One of our latest destroyers is named after him—the "Chase." He merits the honor, and I was glad to pay that tribute to his memory. Tomorrow will be Saturday again and I will be back of the poor horse and said before we got there that we would go in swimming but when we had got our clothes off we thought it might be too cold or the Lost Bag of Tripe would chew raw beef our shirts so we put on our clothes again. This was tuff on Whitley because he wears underclothes and had more to put on than we did. I will be glad when it is summer time and there is good swimming and frogs and snakes and no school and everything.

My mother started to talk about the horse again so me and Jubilee went to bed. It is tuff on my father because when he goes to bed to get away from her she goes along. I am lucky to have Jubilee. He never talks after we get to bed. (To be Continued.)

THE NEW HEROISM

By RICHARD LLOYD JONES

Centuries of monarchism trained the minds of tribes and nations to believe that the noblest of trades is that of war.

Sculpture has been largely given over to the artistic eulogy of the heroes of conquest. The warrior has long been lifted up as the model of nobility. Civilization, in its process of refinement, is teaching a nobler nobility.

When knightwood was in flower the chief warrior was king, and his nobles were his killers. Militarism was the government of monarchism.

Useful trades and occupations, it not quite degrading, were at least beneath the dignity of soldiery. Physical power rather than head or heart power was worshipped. The military instinct corrupted religion. Many still cling to the notion of a Czar-God, the divine paternal power that must be feared, before which we crouch in terror and misgiving, instead of a Jesus-God with whom we find ourselves linked in bonds of love, tenderness, and helpfulness—the God of co-operation and encouragement.

The last half century has found this primitive militant instinct expressing itself in commercial terms in our own country so famous for its industrial prosperity. Men covet the compliment of "captain of industry," "king of finance," or "Napoleon of trade."

In our own political history we find written the story of militant and merciless commercialism laying hold of courts and legislative chambers as once the king's men stormed castle walls and captured citadels.

The agencies of education are bringing us the better light to see the better way and find the finer values along the way.

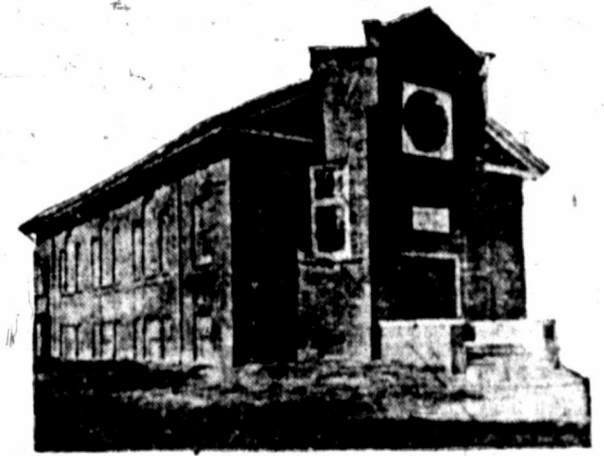

Through the ages past men have coveted power for power's sake whether it be with spear and armor or with the cunning that corrals money. Even our colleges and universities have been known to lend themselves to this conscienceless craving for conquest and have decorated with degrees the donors of halls and dormitories.

But into the twentieth century there breaks a new and truer light of truth. Our colleges are beginning to learn that even scholarships and scientific skill are of secondary purpose; the first duty of any school is to make MEN and WOMEN.

Out of this comes a new order of things. The people once belonged to kings; now kings belong to the people. In this ethical evolution the real man is no longer the hero of conquest; success is measured by what you can get than what you can give. The world is less interested in who you are than in what you are.

Commercialism is becoming the instrument of democracy more than that of individuals. It is nobler to feed and clothe and house than to kill. There is greater honor in helping a man to get on his feet than to hit him on the head and knock him off his feet. Society is beginning to recognize the heroism of the man who helps another to get a farm rather than him who takes away the farm.

In the new order of things laws are designed to help and encourage and build up the fortunes of the many rather than to enthrone the few.
