DUBLIN, July 9.-Ireland and Britain were virtually at peace tonight Sinn fein soldiers, English black and streets. Citizens walked with their families, in no danger of having to dash into doorways to avoid sudden showers of bullets.

The MacRendy-Collins truce does not go into effect officially until Monday noon, but Gen. Nevil MacRendy, com-mander of the British forces, and Michael Collins, head of the republican army, today ordered their men to observe it immediately. British military patrols were withdrawn, and the sentries usually posted at important places were not on duty tonight. Uniformed republican army members strolled about unmolested, and in some instances salutes were exchanged between British and Irish

"With the revival of commerce, the call upon the port for service will be multiplied many times. If Houston is to take advantage of the opportunities to be offered, the people must get to gether on a practical program for port development and be prepared for the new era. The record of the past year new era. The record of the past year administration was elected upon a platform pledged to economy and retrenchment. It has made some slight a foreign market for another barrel of trenchment. It has made some slight cuts in public expenditures, at least sufficient to lend encouragement to the hope that still further reductions will be made. But, if the soldiers bonus runs the gauntilet of legislation and is approved by the president, the economy program will be forced to take its place with the accumulated failures of past administrations, represented that the people demanded a discussing with some of their friends the advisability of organizing a local unredeemed pledges.

the advisability of organizing a local of the Ku Klux Klan in Wichita Falls.

The question arises as to whether Wichita Falls ought to have an organization of this character. Will it do good? Do we want it?

The Times has tried to make its view clear that the methods of the so-called Klan are a denial of the most fundamental of rights and constitute a substitution of terrorism for the service of what was done or the preciation of what was done or the sacrifices made, and the claim that only by a monetary consideration can be to republican leaders in the service is regarded from a monetary basis. There is no lack of appreciation of what was done or the preciation of the repeal of the demand.

The demand for the repeal of the excess profits tax laws, on the contrary, has been audible for many months. It has been plain enough in the ears of republican leaders in Washington, but for some reason, surely a political reason, they give no sign of an intention to heed it. There have been hearings, but there is no bill. A few months ago the subject-tonly by a monetary consideration can little talk is heard. "French heels," as we are accusomed to refer to the thin and traceful portion of footwear worn y women, really came to us from France, for they were originally an effort on the part of an undersized king of France to add to his apparheight by utilizing a device which had been common in China for many centuries and which had been brought into Europe by trav-elers from the Far East. This consisted in the raising of the sandals by means of wooden blocks, so placed that the foot of the wearer vas two or three inches above the round, thus keeping it comparaively dry daring the rainy season. The French ruler, however, saw this an opportunity of increasing his stature by the simple expedient of removing the wooden block which supported the front part of the foot and retaining the one un-der the heel. The shoes made in this manner were so eminently successful that the custom of wearing aigh heels quickly spread throughout the court, being adopted by tall courtiers as well as those of lesser and, upon being imported into England, were naturally known as "French heels"—a name which has now been applied to them for several centuries.

JOHNSON CLAIMS HE WILL MEET 'EM ALL

Negro Heavyweight Claims He Will Fight Anybody-Dempsey is Not Excluded.

KANSAS CITY, MO., July 9 .- Wearing a fashionable gray suit and flashing a characteristic row of tombstones offset by a polka dot tie, Jack Johnson, former heavyweight champion, on his first day of freedom from the Leavenworth federal penitentiary, to-day dared Jack Dempsey to get in the ring with him.

"I'm willing to meet anybody," Johnson declared in a tone of voice that indicated he meant 'em all—big or little.

"Well, bo, didn't you ever see any of them pictures of that fight?" Johnson asked when a newspaper man asked about the Havana affair. "Didn't you see me layin' there trying to keep the sun out of my eyes with my arm." Johnson expressed various opinions various fighters, but the veiled assertions about the genuineness of his knockout by Willard and a slap Jack Kearns that "people who live in glass houses should not throw stones," seemed to get the biggest load off his mind. Claims Innocence of Crime, Johnson maintained he was innocent of the Mann act charge on which he was sent to prison, but "I'm leaving the prison with the same smile I had when I entered. I never drank, I don't gamble, but attend to my own business."

Johnson was a guest today of Harvey Martin, who paid the ex-champion $16 for his first fight. The bout was with John Lee, negro, of Galveston, Texas, 25 years ago.

Johnson declared he was proud of his age of 43 years. While here today he talked over a projected moving pic-ture. "The Heart of Johnson," and returned to Leavenworth tonight, where the was guest and speaker on "Current Topics of the Day and Religion" at a negro church.

Johnson said he would return to his eld home in Chicago in the next few Naturally, when I get home I'm go-

Hollingsworth Leads All Texas Twirlers; Spudders Are Second in Batting Averages

The latest Texas league averages, released by William B. Ruggies, league statistician, reveals two facts that are of interest to Wichita Falls fans. They are that Ezra Hollingsworth is not only the leading Spudder hurser, but that he is the leading hurser of the Texas league. "Holly" is showing the way to fall twirlers in the carned run averages, in the number of games won and lost, and in the number of strikeouts. Nothing cine is needed to prove conclusively that "Holly" is the one leading hurser of the Roberts loop.

The club batting averages reveal the fact that the spudders, despite the fact that they flyished fourth in the league standing during the first half of the season, wound up second to Fort Worth is the matter of club hitting. The Salmites had pounded out 720 safeties, only 24 less than the Panthers.

"Froggy" Rothfuss is leading the local swatemiths with an average of .345. In fielding, Griggs ranks ninth among first basemen with an average of .955. Tanner is fifth among the keysions guardians. Eight third sackers have better average bhan Tex McDonald, who is sporting .925.

Tanner is fifth among the sheristeps with a mark of .319 while Danny Goross is sporting an average of .316.

Rothfuss, with two errors to his credit, is seventh among the left fielders.

Orosa is sporting an average of .318.

Rothfusa, with two errors to his credit, is seventh among the left fielders.

ABILENE, TEXAS, July 2,—At a meeping at Ballinger last night of officials of the West Texas baseball league, a resolution was passed asking for the resignation of J. Walter Morris of Fort Worth as president, R. A. Hodges of Abilene, vice-president, will serve until a new president can be elected. Sweetwater was reinstated tering next year. The circuit is now composed of Abilen., San Angelo. Sweetwater and Ballinger. San Angelo and Sweetwater, whose contro-versy over one game resulted in Sweetwater's withdrawal after President Morris had awarded the first half of the season to San Angelo, agreed to play one game in Abilene July 23 for and brought his string to 31 circuit drives. Ruth also is proving the best run gelter in the Johnson circuit, having registered, $4 times for his club. He bis cracked out 97 hits for a total of 226 bases, which, besides his four-ply, Knocks, include 22 doubles and 7 triplets.

The veteran George Cutshaw of the 18 Pirates enjoyed a great week with the 18 willow and as a result has become the 19 runner-up to Rogers Hornsby, the St. Louis star, among the batters of the National league. Although numerous players are shead of the slugging Pirate, they have not played in as many games, as the averages are of players who participated in 45 or more games.

Cutshaw, who was 1.1 tenth place a week ago, boosted his average from 547 to 365. Hornsby, however fared well with the willow and increased-his the Philadelphia outfielder, also was on a batting rumpage during the holi-days and moved from eighteenth place to fourth position with a mark of 257 compared with 332 a week age. AFTER THIRTY YEARS.

AFTER TMIRTY YEARS.

It has been close upon thirty years since James J. Corbett stepped forth with a new boxing style and upset the old order.

In that thirty cars no one else has come along with anything equal to Corbett's all-around skill in the heavyweight class. No one has arrived who has known as much about the science of boxing. If Corbett had only had the punch of a Fitusiumons or a Dempsey he would have been the greatest heavy-weight of all time, with no one carrying a look-in for at least ten years. Neither Dempsey or Carpentier approaches Corbett, as a boxing master, with his ability to weave in and gut, to hit and get away.

Carpentier, with this clusive style, plus the kick he carries, would have stopped Dempsey inside of ten rounds. But to each man only so much is allotted. No combination Dempsey-Corbett has yet drifted in upon the scene,

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Dempsey in his last five ring encounters has used up the following amounts of time to accumulate his laurel sprigs:

Pulton, twenty seconds; Willard, nine minutes; Miske, ten minutes; Brennan, thirty-five minutes; Carpentier, ten minutes and sixteen seconds.

The total for five fights has been a shade less than sixty-five minutes. He has needed only a trifle more than an hour to beat up or down five of the strongest opponents he could find.

The queer part is that he needed more time to stop Brennan than Pulton, Williard, Misks and Carpentier combined. These four fights averaged less than three rounds. If this isn't merciless efficiency then records are worth ten cents a hogshead. Certainly, all other ring champions have needed much more time and space. In two fights Corbett lasted thirty-three rounds against Jeffries, while Fits traveled twenty-one rounds against the California grizsty. It took Jack Johnson forty-one rounds to step Burns, Ketchell and Jeffries. The ring has never had any such finisher as the present champion happens to be.

"Willard too old to fight again," Joe Stelcher and Strangler Lewis can't inderstand why some one expert didn't break the same gloomy news to Zbyszke few months ago.

The fact that Europe couldn't check a combined assault led by Devereux Milhura. Bill Tilden, Jock Hutchison and Jack Dempsey is nothing to held against her. They caught us this time when we were both set and right, exuding the old combination of pink and class from every open pore. In four widely different fields no one nation ever had quite as much show in the way of champelonship talent.

ELIZABETH STREET

A north front, consisting of five nice sized rooms in the best of condition throughout, $4,500.00. For anyone desiring a nice little home on a reasonable investment you should investigate this property.

ON THE PAVEMENT

One of very few of the best five room modern homes in Wichita Palls: has servent house and garage, is a north front and situated on one of the best residence streets in the city. Owner of this property wishes a larger house and will trade this place in and pay the difference on a six or seven room house that is priced worth the money and well located.

MONROE STREET

An east-front consisting of five nice sized rooms, besides a breakfast room, has maple floors throughout the house, garage and driveway. This place is situated within four blocks of the location for the new high school and is one of the most desirable homes in the city of its size. Can be bought for $7500 and, if desired, on very reasonable terms.

CLOSE IN

On Seventh street, a five room modern house that is exceptionally good revenue property. Owner of this property will trade same in on more desirable resident property farther out.

NINTH STREET

A north front with a 75-foot frontage, on the pavement. This place has five extra large rooms in the best of condition throughout and is one of as good locations for a home as there is in the city. Can be bought below the present market price and, if desired, on very reasonable terms.

MONROE STREET A corner lot with an east front consisting of six nice sized rooms, besides a breakfast room, $7.500. There is not an occasion for an expenditure of one dollar on this property. Anyone desiring a nice little home of this size should see this property as it is positively one of the best homes and the most desirable floor plan of any home in the city of its size.

NINTH STREET A south front consisting of five nice sized rooms, newly papered and painted throughout, has full width and full depth lot, $4,500. This is the greatest sacrifice to be had in the city in a nice little home with such a location as this is.

ELEVENTH STREET

The best interlocking tile and stuces home in the city. This place has six extra large rooms with hardwood floors throughout, servant house and garage and the interior has recently been newly decorated throughout.

HOMES AND INVESTMENTS

We make it a point at all times to have a very complete list of all the best buys to be had in the city and if in the market for a good home or an investment in Wichita Falls it is to your interest to call on us. We assure you that it is a pleasure to have you call.

PRETTY LIFE GUARDS MAKE NEAR-DROWNING A PLEASURE

Who wouldn't want to be rescued by the husky fair lifeguard shown in the photograph? The above young woman, with two other pretty young women swimmers, is on duty at a bathing resort in Brighton Beach, N. Y. Since they have been on duty more men have been near-drowned at the beach than can be recorded. A photographer waited all day at the beach for one of the young liadies to make a rescue, but lack was against him, and he had to get Miss Bertha Tomkins, one of the iffeguards, to carry a "rescued" man ashore in a poseed photograph.

"The North Texas people are talking mighty nice to us just now and, of course, want us on their side; but, as I told them at Dallas, when it's all er we'll have them on our hands th same as now. I am hopeful that out of this controversy there may come a new deal for Wichita Falls on the gas ques tion. I have felt all along that I was personally responsible for the present seemed to be the best deal possible at that time. I am far from being satisfied with it, and hope some new trade can be worked out. It isn't as bad a trade as some other North Texas cities had to take, because in most of the other towns the consumer has to pay a 'ready-to-serye' or overhead charge of 50 cents a month, regardless of the amount of gas used—and we eliminated that feature here."

Tomorrow, July 11, the city of Wichfita Falls will be just 32 years old, for on July 11, 1889, the order for an election to determine whether or not the then backwoods trading post should be officially incorporated was issued. The actual election was not held until the 29th of the month, but inasmuch as the incorporation and issuance of a charter was assured with the election over, old-time officials regard July 11 as the real birthday of the city.

It is doubtful if there is any village, town or hamlet in the United States today which has seen a more rapid or radic 1 growth or a more diversified development than has this self-same Wichita Falls, and a few side lights on the changes which have taken place fluring this development should prove Laid Out in 1876.

Although not officially incorporated until July of 1889, the Wichita Falls townsite was surveyed and laid out in July. 1876. This was done at the instigation of a number of local residents of that period who were anxious that their "post" be formally indicated. No mention was made at the time of procuring a charter, for in fact, the population then was not large enough to warrant such action.

Wichita Falls from time immemorial had been an Indian village, populated largely by the Wichita Indians, from which it is said to derive its name. The which it is said to derive its name. The "falls" was tacked onto Wichita by the fact that a small waterfall, five feet to be exact, existed in the Wichita after up until a few years ago, when the river raised its bed below they cascade and obliterated all traces of it. Coincident with the incorpora-tion of the city a charter was taken out by the Wichita Falls Water Power company, which granted them an 80-acre tract, a mile long and an eighth of a mile wide bordering on each side

The falls were located at a point ome 100 yards below the present on bridge on the Burkburnett , and a small power station was up at their side after a dam had been thrown across the stream to aug-been thrown across the stream to aug-been the fall. The enterprise did not prosper, however, and it was soon closed up, while law suits were started which have been but recently dis-

The Wichita Indians did , not hold complete sway in the early days, ac-cording to stories of old settlers, for at frequent intervals the "post" or vil-lage was occupied by tribes from the north and west who wandered into north and west who wandered into this vicinity during their hunting or warring pligrimages. Quanah Parker, a famous Comanche chieftain, was born in Wichita Falls, but whether his tilbe was then in control of the place or whether his family was here merely on a friendly visit is not known.

"The Stealers, which has attracted much favorable comment wherever shown, is to be the headliner at the Gem this week when it comes for a one day run on Friday. Perhaps no picture of recent years, unless it be George Loan Tucker's "The Miracle Man," has been so completely and absorbingly displayed as has "The Stealers," for in dealing with a vital and human subject the producers have handled it with a touch of rare skill and the result is one that will standlong as a film masterpiece.

PILGRIM PAGEANT TO TRACE HISTORY OF THREE CENTURIES IN PLYMOUTH CELEBRATION

PLYMOUTH, July 3.—Despite the fact that America today has been "educated," through statues and painting, into believing that the Pilgrim Fathers were a dour log of greybeards, the gallant band which dared the perils of the Atlantic 300 years ago were young men—"liberals" of 1620, "with plenty of God-given common sense"—and as such, will be presented in "The Pilgrim Spirit," the mammoth pageant. The pageant itself is made while a hint of Mrs. Carr's activities is conveyed when one learns that she has cut up some 3,000 yards of material. No account of this aspect of the pageant would be complete without mention of Mrs. Marrian Poor, whose marvelous batik work produces out of homely materials the most wonderful effects of rich satins and velvets. Pilgrim Spirit." the mammoth pageant to be staged here, beginning July 13, as the dramatic climax of a year of sic spec celebrations marking the tercentenary Gilbert. the actual landing at Plymouth

This correction of history comes from Prof. George P. Baker of the "dramatic workshop" at Harvard university, author and director of the spectacle with its 1,400 actors. Prof. Baker made a special trip to England and Holland on research into who and what the Pilgrims really were. The scenario, Prof. Baker is frank to admit, will raise many questions as to authenticity of his viewpoint on the adventurers, but each of the 20 big scenes is backed up by documentary evidence obtained in the places in which the Pilgrims lived.

Professor Baker explains that what Professor Baker explains that what he has tried to do in writing the pageant is indicated by its title. "The Pilgrim Spirit." That is, he has attempted not merely to give a series of historical scenes, but to trace the growth and influence of the Pilgrim spirit, upon American life and characspirit upon American life and charac-ter through the three hundred years that have elapsed since the original little band first landed from the May-flower on Plymouth Rock. That spirit, Prof. Baker believes, is still alive in America today, is, indeed, as it always has been, the most sane and wholeome influence in American life.
Asked exactly what he meant by the that the Pilgrim spirit was a mixture of toleration, spirituality and God-given common sense."

Asked if it was the Pilgrims who were responsible for the blue laws. Professor Eaker laughed and remarked that he had already drawn attention to their toleration. Amplifying this, he said that their toleration and sound non sense were nowhere more nocommon sense were nownere more no-ticeable than in their dealings with subsequent settlers.

"They handled the immigration problem of the day," he said, "with remarkable tact."

In the cast of 1,400 people that is necessary for the presentation of the ageant, Professor Baker finds Pilgrim spirit admirably exemplified. In this huge cast the oldest families of Plymouth and the newest rub shoulders. So far as is possible, the roles of the prominent Pilgrims have been assigned to "Mayflower" de-scendants or to representatives of old New England families. In the mob scenes, however, the "New Americans" who make up fixty per cent of the cast figure prominently. And here Miss Virginia Tanner, assisting Professor Baker in the direction of the pageant, breaks into the conversation with a pacan of praise for the natural artistic instinct of the Italian and Portuguese men and women, girls and boys whom she is nightly guiding through the in-tricate mazes of Dutch and other "They are wonderful," she exthing once, and often at that through an interpreter, and they seem to catch the spirit of it immediately."

"We are apt to forget at times," Pro-fessor Baker says in describing the episode, "that America, at the time the Pilgrims decided to come here, was fairly well known as a result of the voyages of various adventurers.

Consequently, the first episode, starting with the legendary coming of the Viking ship of Thorwald, in 1000 A. D., goes on to present in tableau form the various adventurerers who preceded the Mayflower to the American coast early in the seventeemth cen-tury—Martin Pring, Champlain, Admi-ral Blok, Captain John Smith, Thomas The second episode takes us to the

In the third episode we follow the fortunes of the Pilgrims in Holland, their refuge for eleven years, and see them make the great decision to con-tinue their pilgrimage to New England. The dances in the Dutch scenes, according to Miss Tanner, are particular-ly effective. The music for these scenes is furnished by Frederic Converse and Leo Sowerby, while the words for the Pilgrim chorus in the departure scene are by Edward Aritingon Robinson.

Franklin factory in this city and the entire Franklin dealer organization from coast to coast is doing itself proud this week in honoring John Wilkinson, vice-president and consulting engineer of the Franklin company, who just twenty years ago—or on July 7, 1901,—started work on a new autonobile. At the outset, he determined to make something that had never before been produced in America—a four-cylinder air-cooled outomobile. On March 3 of the following year the first completed car, a two-passenger runabout, was turned out, which was destined to be known as the Franklin car, and twelve more were made dur-ing 1903. The next -ear this number had increased to .84 and two years later to 712. Since the first Franklin was made nearly 65,000 Franklin cars have been shipped from the Franklin factory, and today the Franklin is sold in 525 cities in this country alone, and in twelve foreign countries. From one small building housing 65 employes, the Franklin plant has grown until now it is the dominating industry of Syracuse with a group of eighteen large buildings covering thirty-four acres of floor space, and a pay roll at the present time aggregating 3,200 names. A finished car rolls off e final assembly floor every thirteen minutes of the working day.

To have passed the twentieth mile-stone of its existence is a creditable achievement for any business organimation, but in the automobile business it means much more, for the industry uself is scarcely older than that. Scores of automobile manufacturers have come and gone in the past two decades; the concerns who were turning out cars in 1902 and who are making them are less than a baker's dozen in number.

Hudson Super-Six

Of course, that can not be literally true. But because of the ease with which adjustments can be made and replacements installed, the Hudson Super-Six has virtually a perpetual life.

No Super-Six seems ever to have become wholly disabled through wear. In fact, in various parts of the country men make a business of buying up old Hudsons and restoring them. You would be surprised at the slight cost necessary to put a Super-Six in good condition. No special skill not found in the average repair shop is required.

And the fact that Hudson body lines have been so consistently expressive of good taste, makes them acceptable when more extreme types have become "Old Fashioned."

Because of these facts you will find Hudsons six years old that are nearing a hundred thousand miles of service.

Let Service Decide

TF ALL tires were made equally well, there would be no way to explain the marked preference for Federal Tires.

For one tire may appear as good as another up to a certain point - then the tire that is made better begins to demonstrate its ability to wear longer.

That Federal tires do give unusual service is best evidenced by the increasing number of car users who continually buy Federal tires because they give longer mileage.

You are sure to be pleased with the exceptional service you get from Federal tires as well as with the frankness and courtesy which we regard as a very definite part of every tire transaction.

Begin today to use Federal tires and you will decrease your tire expense as you increase your tire mileage.

In the majority of cases the truck was not overloaded and the tire equipment was of the correct size and type. So, considerable inconvenience, not to say expense, was unnecessarily involved.

According to a truck tire official of the Firestone Tire and Rubber com-the Firestone Tire and Rubber com-pany, there is now coming into general use by these states an ingenious and most practical machine known as the loadometer which is a combined jack and weight indicator. Placing one beneath each axie the truck and load is lifted clear of the road and at the same time weighed. When this operation is completed the type and size of the robotical way. weight recorded.

These tests not only enable the authorities to enforce the law, and assist in its preservation, but they bring out the interesting fact that truck tire dealers are demonstrating their qualifications as transportation experts, for instances are rare if not non-existent where the truck's tire equipment has been found out of accord with state regulations, or the wrong size and type secording to the standard of transpor tation engineers.

This is not surprising, for the truck tire dealer of today, when called upon to supply new equipment, first makes careful analysis of all the conditions under which the truck must operate. The roads on which the truck must travel, its usual type of load and the rguck's capacity are closely considered and then, having based his decision on ables prepared by tire and transportation engineers, the tire dealer recom-mends the type of tire—cushions or pneumatics—and signifies the correct ize for front and rear wheels respec in this way not only is the interest of the public served to the extent of close co-operation in the matter of highway preservation, but the investment 'he truck operator has in his truck is protected as well when equipped with the propes size and type of tire.

In announcing a readjustment of prices we feel privileged to recall certain facts which have stood as examples of Oldsmobile policy on prices and values.

PRICES

In December last, when we introduced the new 4-cylinder model 43-A, the price was at once acknowledged to be extraordinarily low, clearly predicated upon a material market much below December

Again, on April 30th, when we announced the new eight-cylinder model 47, the same price policy inspired a public demand that exceeded the output of the great Oldsmobile plants at full pro-

Now that material prices and labor costs have become leveled, Oldsmobile policy readjusts prices to a further public advantage.

In actual performance, appearance and dependability, and in the refinements that have always expressed Oldsmobile quality, there is value nowhere even approached among moderate priced cars.

And Oldsmobile policy has continued to justify the deep public confidence that forms the greatest Oldsmobile asset.

But water department statistics show that it takes 75 gallons per individualfor all purposes during any 24-hour eriod. It requires around three mil-on gallons a day to keep Wichita Falls sufficiently wet, and that is an average of 75.
During the early morning hours

After 8 m. the line swings slowly down while midnight. Then it swings up a fittle for at that hour railford supply tanks are filled, and they use lots of water. At times during the day, consumption is at the rate of near 4,000,000 gallons and at other times if drops down nearly to 2,000,000. Probably 3.000,000 gallons daily is the city's average daily consumption. It varies with the seasons, being heaviest in hot weather, but the year around varia-tion isn't large. You keep on using your 75 gallons pretty consistently.

When Buying a Car, Let Your Mechanical Mind Be Your Guide

Our honest conviction is that no other car in the Hupmobile class presents so many of the good mechanical points which are usually confined to cars selling for

To begin with, the Hupmobile is manufactured in Hupmobile plants, by skilled Hupmobile workmen.

Motor, clutch, transmission, axles are Hupmobile products-with no limit placed on the quality of materials or workmanship by some outside manufacturer.

That means that Hupmobile engineer-

More than anything else, perhaps, that accounts for the greater economy, the longer life, and the higher re-sale value which make the Hupmobile worth what it costs.

Senate Work Thus Far Has Been Disappointing to Those Who Believe in Action.

By MARK SULLIVAN National Political Correspondent of the New York Evening Post and the Wichita Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—At the end of the fourth month of Harding's administration some things are so clear and so much taken for granted that it is difficult to realize how different they are than what was anticipated. It is difficult to realize that a year ago, when Harding was nominated, and eight months ago when he was elected, and four months ago when he was inaugurated into office, there was wonder as to the degree to which he would be subservient to the senate. be subservient to the senate.

Even less than three months ago, when Harding made his opening address to the present session of con-gress, he was still sufficiently con-scious of this atmosphere to utter an urbane but firm warning to the senate to the effect that each must respect the others prerogative. All of this, recent though it is, now seems like some-thing as far back as William McKinley and Mark Hanna. Nobody talks any more about the "senatorial oligarchy."
The senate, far from controlling the administration, does not even control. itself, and the question that is upper-most today is not whether the senate is going to dominate Harding but the degree to which Harding must be led re-luctantly to dominate the senate if the country is the et any action out of the latter body.

Harding Develops Strength. The reasons for all this lie chiefly in Harding's unexpected strength and the senate's unexpécted weakness. Harding has gone quietly about his job and has done it well. The senate for a week or two talked somewhat excitedly week or two talked somewhat excitedly about the control they were going to assume over the government, and espe-cially over foreign affairs. That came to nothing, and since then the senate has done nothing to impress the public has done nothing to impress the public with one exception.

This exception does not really represent the senate: Senator Borah's initiative in proposing an international conference for disarmament and his energy in pressing it until an unwilling or indifferent senate voted for it unanimously is the solitary act that has come out of the senate in the nature of the sort of leadership likely; to impress come out of the senate in the nature of the sort of leadership likely to impress the public and give the senate prestige.

Any fair review of Harding four months in the white house must credit him with a most impressive record of achievement. In the first place, he appointed a cabinet of strong men. Not less important than this is the fact he has kept this group of strong men working in complete and happy hardmony. Once in so often a fragment of the kind of gossip that is too common in Washington expresses speculamon in Washington expresses specula-tion as to who will be the first to re-sign from the cabinet. In this, of course, there is always an implication of some rift or other in Harding's of-ficial family. The truth, however, is there is nothing in this. Probably Harding's greatest gift is that quality of his personality which has enabled he able to do this at a period when the reorganization of government depart-ments raises an unusual number of opportunities for contention is the more

Aside from this cabinet, many of Harding's other appointments have been of a sort to entrench him very trongly in the public favor. It would be difficult to overestimate the amount of prestige he has got from the appointment of General Dawes, and for the conspicuous way in which General Dawes has started out to make good n his job. The BOGIE of FEAR & Arthur Somers Roche

THE STORY.

ALLAYNE GUERNSEY'S bogic of fear is the dread of scandal. Her father committed suicide when he was discovered in a lineon with a chorus girl. Her mother died of a broken heart soon afterward. Therefore Allayne has no pity when SPENSER BQURKE, her fiance, is arrested in a raid on a gay party at a roadhouse. She will listen to no explanations, and breaks the engagement forth-mith. As a matter of fact, the raid was "framed."

BENNETT HALSEY, a smooth crook who has gained an entrée into society and has his eye on the inherited Guernsey millions. Somewhat to his own surprise, Halsey succeeds in playing on Allayne's outraged feelings and persuading her to marry him.

They start on their honermoon.

SECOND INSTALLMENT.

The Great War had broken out in 1914. Just as Mrs. Guernsey had completed plans for a tour of Europe with Allayne. In the seven years that had elapsed Allayne had thought hundreds of times of the day when she would visit Europe. Halsey's glowing plans, so carelessly uttered awakened a reonse in her. To see Europe in company with this charming, distinguished English man sought after by all of New York that · · · Having decided to accept counted Halsey, he became colored with that glamerous romance with which lovers are invested.

If deep down in her heart she was regret-Jul of young Spenser Bourke, the iron pride that she had inherited from her mother made her refuse to recognize regret. If her quick acceptance of Halsey was due in part her sudden severing of her engagement to "ourke, if she even subconsciously wanted to Arow Bourke how little she cared, she was ...ot aware of it. She agreed to marry Halsey as he wished.

Gelstein had become the least bit restive. He wanted action. But when Halsey showed him the license, and told him where the ceremony was to occur the Gelstein suspicions evaporated. He even insisted on sharing a pint of champagne, procured from some illicit source, with Halsey shortly before the ceremony. Thus started, Gelstein found it difficult to stop. The share of the pint was followed by a quart. His heart was mellow and his tongue was loose when he ran across, about the time that Allayne Guernsey was becoming Mrs. Bennett Halsey, Rosa.

Gelstein had not seen the woman for five years, but no one who had ever seen her lithe figure, slim, catlike, surmounted by the a sullenly beautiful face, could ever forget her. It was on Broadway, near Times Square, and was hurrying, apparently for a Subway entrance. Gelstein interposed his formidable bulk squarely in her path.

"If it ain't Rosa," he exclaimed cordially. The woman started. For a moment it Deemed as though she meditated flight. Gelstein read her mind. He waved his hand It's all right, Rosa," he said, "me and Benny fixed up that money matter." The color came back into her cheeks. She had been cognizant of the affair between Halsey and Gelstein. She could not be involved in it, nevertheless it was unpleasant facing Gelstein if he happened to be in a bad humor.

I'm glad of that," she said cordially. It was true; she much preferred peace to war, honesty to dishonesty. "Benny never told the meaning of what he had said. "When'd you leave Paris?" asked Gelstein, the waiter went off to fulfill the order. Oh-a while back," said Ross vaguely.

Gelstein waved a chubby hand; his huge diamond ring glinted in the sunlight. "Oh, it's been since you quit Benny that we fixed it up," he said.

Ye and Benny, he tells me, didn't hit it vi well," said Gelstein. Rosa shrugged. Also, her glance was coy. Beneath it Gelstein felt his pulses beat a Kind of fun showing you the town, Ross, be suggested.

I've heard worse propositions," she admitted. " How is old Benny?" she asked. If Benny Halsey was telling old acquaintances that he was through with her, she wanted to know why.

Geistein chuckled. "He's the same old live one." he said. "Can you imagine him bein' married?" "What?" Only by an effort did she re-

Prain from screaming the question. Now, even liquor could not ordinarily make Geistein incautious. But Rosa was, he thought, a very beautiful woman. Also, she was unattached., But in the past she had been devoted to Benny Halsey. Might not there still lurk within her breast some apark of attachment to Halsey? If so, it would interfere with his own sudden desire for her.

So he forgot to be cautious. Sure Today," he asserted. You're crazy," she sneered.

All right, then I'm crazy," said Gelstein. Only. I left him half an hour, and he was on, his way to the minister's then, with a ring and a license and everything, and tickets on the Montreal Express-you can get a drink up there without risking jail, you know. Oh, he's married, all right."

'Who's the woman?" demanded Rosa. Geistein looked up. Something that he w in her eyes frightened him. He pushed back his chair. Say, look here, Rosa, what's eating you? What difference does it make to you whether Benny Halsey gets hitched or not?"

Answer me," she said. Gelstein was afraid of no man who walked. Women were different. Sometimes they cried and ran away, and sometimes they cried and ran right over you. Rosa's hand was resting on the teapot. She might, as he phrased it to himself, "crown" him with it.

'Gal named Guernsey." he said sullenly. Got a load of jack. What difference does it make to you, anyway?"

But Rosa didn't hear his question. Before Gelstein could interpose his fat bulk she had passed by his chair and was on the way from

She was unnerved, un strung, but still no suspicion of Halsey clouded her heart. But Halsey, himself dishonest and therefore always suspicious, read into her natural reaction following so violent even though brief, a scene, the thing that was always uppermost in his own heart, ruspicion.

Allayne stared at him. Of course she be lieved him; was he not her lawfully wedded husband? But even as she was assuring herself that she did believe him, doubt, the doubt created by Halsey's own insistence, was being born in her mind. She pushed, half con sciously, Halsey's greedy lips farther away

Why-why, Ben," she said, "you-youwhen she screamed-and you looked so queer -you said something, too. I remember it now. You said 'Rosa.' I heard you."

Now, Halsey had waited all his life for the big killing. It was at hand at last. He had that infinite patience which people, nations sometimes possess until the sought for goal seems near at hand. Then patience leaves them and they are impetuous, casting away in a moment of rashness the thing for which they labored, perhaps, years.

Allayne Guernsey had been married to him an hour ago. Her lips belonged to him; her fortune was his. But at the moment he thought of her lips more than of her money She was enticing, attractive, irresistible, That she had dismissed Bourke because of a carefully engineered scandal was all very well. Allayne stared at her husband. Into her eves crept that same flery hardness that had been in them when she had sent from her side young Bourke. Had Halsey been used to dealing with gentlewomen, had his knowledge of well-bred people been something deeper than it was, he would not have made the mistake of assuming-immediately-that fire in Allayne's eye was that of anger, and that it was caused by jealousy. He looked upon Alleyne as a

He knew that she was obsessed by the fear of scandal. Yet, because his quaintance with women was confined to Rosa Halsey's type, he believed that the main reason that Allayne had rid herself of Bourke was jealousy. Bourke had run around, as Halsey phrased it, with some careless women. At least, Allayne had thought so. Now, there'd be a few tearsand that would be all. Of course, if she really . But she wouldn't. She'd do anything rather than have scandal.

So he smiled and reached once more for

For a moment their eves met. Hers were suddenly haggard, sunken. And through them she saw this man, her husband, as she had not seen him heretofore. All the glamour of his greater experience, the suavity of manner that travel had engenderedthese things were stripped from him. She saw him as a rascal who would not hesitate to treat a woman dishonorably. As comwith his offense the sin of Bourke seemed nothing. How could she, even for a moment, have judged so harshly the youth hom she lad loved, whom--God forgive her she loved at this moment? For suddenly she realized that she had never ceased to driven him from her, had wrecked her life. Wrecked it For upon the ruins that she had made of life no clean and wholesome structure could ever be erected. What had happened could never be undone. For the noisome formalities of a divorce court would leave her always stained, soiled. And 'yet, what else could she do? This woman at the train gates her claim was a prior one to that of Allayne.

Claim? She, Allayne, had no claim, no wish to maintain one. She only wanted to alone, away, far from the filthy tangle in which she had become enmeshed

Something of what was going on in her mind communicated itself to Halsey. His eyes, too, grew suddenly haggard, afraid "Look here, Allayne," he said, "you aren't going to be unreasonable, are you?"

Unreasonable? I'm going to ask you to eave me," she said. Halsey tried to bluster. "That's nonsense

Once again their eyes met. Then his hands gripped her shoulders. But she was years younger than he, lithe, strong. She eleased herself easily, whereas the effort whitened his lips, made his heart, that tricky heart of his, race and pound against his ribs

Will you go?" she asked quietly.

What will I say-to the porter-the conductor?" he asked. In this moment of crisis in his whole life, his usual wit deserted him. He thought as people caught in a fire think of wastebaskets, of such matters as the opinions of the train hands.

"You had no difficulty in thinking of things to tell me." she said coldly.

He was dazed; only the fact that his racing heart warned him against any violence pre vented him from seizing her again, striking He had planned so highly, and had accomplished so lowly. And he realized, as one realizes the inevitability of the oncoming sunset, that Allayne was un changeable. That was the great outstanding quality of her. He knew exactly what she'd do. He sat in dark ness, watching, in a daze, what went on a few yards below him, offering his weak heart as excuse for not joining in the rescue.

From the farther end of the train he saw two people stagger. The flame burned brightly there, and by its light he saw that one carried the other, and that the one being borne was a woman.

THE MAN WHO GUARDS THE GATE TO UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN

W. W. Husband, New Commissioner General of Immigration, in Whose Hands Is the Enforcement of the New Law Cutting the Number of Aliens Admitted by About Seventy-five Per Cent

SS A FTER a century of vacillation," said W. W. Husband, the new Commissioner General of Immigration, "the United States finally has found for itself a policy with relation to the peoples to whom it will open its doors; to whom it will offer a share of the assets which belong to it as the wealthiest of nations. Hereafter, it would seem, if one may judge from the frame of the public mind, as it is being evidenced in legislation, the question which will be asked of those who present themselves for admission into this country will be. Are they people of our own stock?" I had gone to Mr. Husband to interview him on immigration at this time when the new law that Congress had given us experimentally for one year was being put to test. I wanted him to visualize for me the immigration situation, in the first place, because he was the Government official who is charged with the application of the new law. An additional reason for talking with him was the fact that he is generally recognized as the man who has given more thought and study to this subject during the last twenty years than any other. As a matter of fact, he has devoted himself almost exclusively to the study of it during that When, some years ago, Congress appointed a commission on immigration and authorized it to make an extensive study of that subject, a study which was afterward published in forty-two volumes, Mr. Husinto the problem has ever been in any way comparable with that of the Immigration Commission. Since completing this task Mr. has studied the problems from the standpoint of the United States, and has spent several years in European countries gathering facts as to the races who seek to come to America. His appointment as successor of Mr. Caminetti was in the way of a pro-

Mr. Husband began life in the little village of East Highgate, Vt., which, he says, boasted thirty-two houses at the time of his birth, but which since that time has shrunk to a village of but thirty domiciles. He was the son of a scythe grinder in this village and his father owned an acre of ground, a house and a cow. The food yield of the cow and the acre, supplemented by the earnings of the father in his shop, brought competence and security to the little family. America would be better off, says Mr. Husband, if more of its families today had an

GOTTHE new Immigration Law, which went into effect June 3," he continued, "completely demolished the former theory that we should allow all immigrants presenting themselves and meeting certain rather easy requirements to find homes in this country. Instead of leaving the doors open to all who come, we stipulated in this law that no nation should send to us in any year more than 3 per cent of the number of people born within its borders who resided in the United States at the time of the taking of the census of 1910. The law was very simple and was supplementary to former immigration legislation, leaving the details of administration to be carried on

This means that we are to admit into the United States for the coming year about one-fourth of the people who will be expected to apply, one-fourth of the number before the war. In addi tion to restricting the number of immigrants, this law is quite favorable to the Western and Northern Europeans, since their citizens had been coming into the United States for so many years prior to 1910 that they have a more favorable quota upon which to base the number that may be admitted this year. In application, this law will admit only about one-fifth of the number of people from Southern and Eastern Europe that might otherwise be expected to come, while it will exclude no Western Europeans, since immigration from those countries has not been strong for the last two decades.

During the last twenty years more than 15.000,000 immigrants have been admitted into the United States. It is evident that this 15,000,000 out of a little more than 100,000,000 constitutes a considerable percentage of our population and has just that percentage of effect upon the making up of the whole people.

"Now when we study the elements that have contributed most largely to this new blood that has been added to the American stock, we find that the larger elements are of Southern and Eastern Europeans. There is one item, for instance, of nearly 3,500,000. Italians, people of Latin blood and therefore not of fundamental American stock. The second largest item of this immigration is the Polish element, of whom 1,500,000 have come in twenty years. The Poles are, of course. Slavs, and therefore of very different blood from the old Americans. In addition to the Poles, there have come from Eastern Europe 200,000 Finns, 250,000 Lithuanians, 140,000 Rumanians, 240,000 Russians, 260, 000 Ruthenians, 500,000 Croatians and Slovenians, 150,000 Czechs, Serbians and Bulgarians, and nearly 500,000 Slovaks. Thus of these Eastern Europeans we find that we have a grand total of something like 4,000,000.

"To the Italians in Southern Europe we must add half a million Greeks

"Then there is to be considered another great block of 1,500,000 Hebrews who have come to America in the last two decades.

"These are people who have made up the mass of the immigration. It has become obvious that if this sort of immigration continues indefinitely the blood of America will be entirely different from what it was in the days of our fathers and from what it is now, and that we will become a people of an entirely different breed.

"So it becomes obvious that the proportions of immigrants who are to be admitted into the United States as between Western Europeans and Southern and Eastern Europeans is to be upon an entirely new basis. As many will come from Western Europe as were coming in 1914, yet but one-afth as many will come from Southern and Eastern

"Upon this basis of admitting 3 per cent of the number of people that were here in

W. W. Husband, whose work as secretary of the Congressional Commission leaves Europe. It must be borne in mind that we could not set up an organization for doing just that thing in a foreign country without the consent of that country, which consent certainly could not be generally secured. It must be recognized also that an organization to do this work would needs be complicated and far flung to be effective. On the other hand, the process of selection exercised at the ports of the United States concentrates 85 per cent of the work at one point-Ellis Islami. 'It'is a fact not generally recognized 1910 Italy may send to us this year 42,000 Later, we were disturbed over the effect of immigrants. During the five years that pre- these newcomers upon the supply of labor. There was the claim on one side that their admission lowered the standard of living of the American worker, and on the other hand that the vital thing for the Nation was an abundance of labor that it might de.

Some of the personal problems which every steamship from Europe brings to our shores for Mr. Husband to solve led the war she sent each year an average of 220,000. Russia may send 34,000 this year and she used to send 210,000 each twelvemonth. This year 25,000 Poles may come over where we used to get 150,000. We may accept but 3286 Greeks where we used to get 26,000 a year. We will this year let in but 653 Turks where we used to let in 30,000 a year.

BUT in West Europe the results will be quite different. Those countries have many sons and daughters in the United States, but the numbers were built up before the competition of the Latins and Slava began. When these latter immigrants began swarming into the industries of America they came "to" be" no longer attractive to Scandinavians, Welshmen, Irishmen and Germans. The numbers of those immigrants became small compared with the earlier

'So it is shown by the figures that where the United Kingdom used to send 89,000 people a year she may still send 77,000. Where France used to send 5000 she may, under the new law, send 8000. Norway may send 12,000 where she used to send 11,000; Sweden may send 19,000 instead of 17,000; Denmark, 6000 instead of 5000. These Scandinavian countries are entitled to send more people than they have been sending. Germany has the best emigrant situation of them all from the standpoint of being admitted into America, for she is entitled to a quota of 68,000 as against half that number that have been coming.

It is held that, with the South and East Europeans removed as competitors for immigrant jobs, the numbers from West Europe will increase. So will we draw on the old stock which laid the foundation for the American race and so will we check the drift away from it,

The fundamental stock of the people in the United States is Western and Northern Europe. The new law will not interfere with additions to that stock. It will, however, cut very deeply into the introduction of the blood of Southern and Eastern Europe, which blood is of quite different strains from those that flowed to the United States during its formative growth. That principle of permitting additions of the old stock and restricting additions of other strains is the big new principle which underlies the developing theory of immigration

"What have been the principles," I asked. "that have in the past affected the admission of foreign peoples?"

"Immigration," said the commissioner. has been as given to fads as is woman's dress. Since we began to study the peoples who were coming to our shores, first one and then another comparatively unimportant idea has dominated the situation. Seventyfive years ago we were much agitated over the religion of the people who were coming. velon into industrial greatness.

"At a still later time the country was much disturbed over the members of criminal classes that were coming from abroad. and the 'Black Hand' became one of the alleged national menaces. Since the war, the coming of Europeans who were thought to plan the disintegration of established society has been the phase of the question which has lent itself most readily to sensational consideration. 'Now at last we have come to consider and have written into law the fundamental theory that the important thing from the standpoint of the immigrant is not the temporary situation that may arise because of his coming, but the permanent contribution that he will make to the flesh and blood of the Nation. His effect upon the labor situation, even his effect upon the dwellers in our jails, is a temporary thing, but the blood of the individual immigrant may multiply and remultiply itself in his descendants until it is represented by hundreds of thousands of individuals who contribute to the body politic of the future, which is the American people.

WHEN the United States takes the position that it prefers that the people of one stock, rather than the people of another stock, shall be added to its citizens, it in no respect reflects upon the races which it excludes. One farmer might maintain a pure strain of Jersey cattle and another farmer might maintain a pure strain of Hereford cattle. Both strains are very excellent, but it would be greatly to the disadvantage of the man who breeds Jersey cattle to have an occasional Hereford put into his herd. "The fundamental stock of the people of the United States came from those races which inhabit Western and Northern Europe. They have decided that this is the strain which they prefer to perpetuate. They have, therefore, drafted an immigration law which will tend to strengthen that race and thus eliminate the introduction of the elements of other stocks that are not of that race."

"In it admitted." I asked, "that a nation has a perfect right to exclude individuals from other nations if it sees fit?" ably the best established principle of the right of nations," said Mr. Husband, "is the right to exclude from their borders whomever they see fit. We wrote this principle into law when we passed the Chinese Exclusion Act. We further established it when we reached an agreement with Japan which prevented the flow of members of that race to our shores. We have gone much further in this new law, which specifies the number of people that each nation may send to our shores.

"With the situation thus developed in Southern and Eastern Europe," I suggested, "in which three out of four who want to come to the United States are denied that privilege, will it not be possible for the, United States to carefully select the fittest and refuse the less fit, and in that way to add always the best quality of individual to its citizens?"

"That is the principle," said Mr. Husband, "that we are very anxious to work out, but it is an accomplishment surrounded by many difficulties. At present, for example, a passport from the immigrant's native country is required before he is allowed to start for America? The passport must be viseed by an American consul.

"Now the quite natural thing is that the country from which the emigrant is departing should want to send away its least destrable citizens and retain its most desirable. It is quite natural that it should want to get rid of the trouble makers and of the individuals who will in perpetuating themselves unfavorably, affect its citizenship. One may naturally expect that there will be a tendency to issue passports to the people that we do not want. The representatives of our Government will quite naturally want to help those who would make the best citizens to come and discourage the others. So here we have the advantage of the country of origin of the immigrant quite diametrically opposed to the advantage of the United States. So, even were it possible for the American consul in viseing passports to wisely exercise judgment in selecting these, who are to come to the United States, there would be a certain difficulty in

SETT HAS been often asserted that the great need of our immigration problem is that careful selection should be carried on by our representatives before the immigrant that the great flow of immigration into the United States during the last twenty years is due almost entirely to one thing-the steamshin agent. It has been beyond the power of the United States to control the operation of steamship agents in foreign countries. I studied this question in great detail throughout Europe. I found, for example, that in Russia the steamship agent was everywhere present. At a village fair in Russia, for example, it always happened that some one had received a letter from a relative who had gone to America and that individual was much given to reading this letter aloud to one group after another of his acquaintances. Always in that group there would be found a representative of the steamship company. After the glories of America had been expounded he would show how Utopia might be reached. Late in the afternoon you would always find him at his office surrounded by an ardent group of young Russians, for some of whom he was arranging

This sort of solicitation was against the law in Russia, but it nevertheless went on. Italy did not object to it because Italy required that many of her people go abroad, she being unable to support her increasing population at home. Bulgaria, on the contrary, was anxious to prevent emigration and took quite effective steps to that end. Her citisens were not prohibited from coming to the United States, but steamship tickets, she ruled, could be bought from but one individual in all Bulgaria, an official with headquarters at Sofia.

"The flood of immigration to the United States has been artificially induced. Under the new law it will be impossible for the steamship agents to operate in this way advantageously and there will be a constant tendency for immigration to return to the normal flow of those individuals who, for themselves, determine to enter upon the great adventure."

'Did the study of the Immigration Com mission," I asked Mr. Husband, "show that America was digesting the flood of immigrants that were being admitted?"

By William Atherton Du Puy

on Immigration fits him for his new work

"Quite the contrary." he replied, "Throughout the earlier history of our national existence the people who came were of kindred races and were more easily digested, and in those times also it seemed that the stomach of the Nation could assimilate horseshoes. The vitality of it and the spirit of it were equal to that emergency. It used to be that groups of peoples from European countries would congregate and sing folk songs, dance folk dances and otherwise attempt to maintain their associations. but these efforts never amounted to more than sentimental undertakings and the people who engaged in them forgot old ties in a few decades. Of late, however, the groups that have come have been so strong in num. bers and have gathered in knots that were so self-sufficient that it has often happened that they have come to know and appreciate the American viewpoint quite inadequately. It is these groups of people who refuse to enter into the melting pot and become trueelements in the American civilization, without ties to other country or race, that have finally led to the creation of barriers that will in the future quite effectually exclude

"The present law will be in operation until June 30, 1922. It is regarded as an emergency statute, a law to safeguard the situation until an adequate study could be made and the proper law written. Congress may give us a permanent law which will select for admission the immigrant with will contribute that progeny which will most nearly approximate the race we desire

When they were safely married he cleared his throat and announced to his bride that he had a confession to make.

"It's about the wedding present I have for you," he said. "I thought-that is, Iwell. I calculated it would be a nice surprise. I have four children at home waiting to call you mother."

Mexican Folk Lore Story Is the Inspiration for Big Cactus Candy Industry

ties of cacti which greet the eyes of the passenger on the transcontinental train crossing the ash-gray deserts of Western America attracts the traveler's notice. Anywhere on that expanse from the Canadian border to the Rio Grande bounded on the east by Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas and on the west by the Pacific Ocean are found millions of cactus plants.

The traveler inevitably wants to know what they are good for; and the old-timer reluctantly concedes they have few uses. There is a widely circulated legend that Luther Burbank has made the cactus an economic plant by taking the spine out of it. The cattle people were eager to believe the legend. Many invested considerable money in the effort to cultivate the spineless cactus. But they found, after much patient effort, that the cattle will not eat the cactus. It is a curious paradox that the species of cacti which animals fear most is the plant which has the greatest economic value. The needle-bristling cactus, colloquially known as the "niggerhead" and botanically as the Visnaga, is the foundation for an industry that is growing amazingly. The manufacture of cactus candy is one of the most substantial enterprises in the State

Singularly enough the business owes its existence solely to a romantic legend current among the sad-eyed Mexican descendants of the gentle Toltecs, who were the ancestors of the barbaric Aztecs. This poetic tale is told by many humble peons when they espy the Visnaga cactus near the desert trail. They still secretly believe the fable and invest the plant with supernatural qualities. They believe there is imprisoned within the Visnaga cactus the soul of a beautiful maiden. The white pulp is believed to be a symbol of her purity. The armor of thorns covering its tough rind is supposed to have been placed there by the sun-god who is in love with the maid.

This legend forms the basis for the Toltec wedding ritual, which is still practiced by the Mexicans in the intimacy of their own communities.

After the young man has ascertained that his suit is regarded with favor, he retires to the desert and searches exhaustively for the choicest specimen of the Visnaga cactus. Then, out in the heat of the blazing sun, he removes the myriads of thorns with his bare hands. After this difficult operation has been finished he peels away the tough rind by using only his teeth. If his courage and arder for the maid still survive, he must then cut the glistening white pulp into certain small white disks. This is supposed to signify the unending nature of his love.

Cork's Many Uses

THE finest cork in the world comes from Spain. The province of Andalusia is particularly famous for its cork trees.

Cork stoppers manufactured in Spain are exported thence to all parts of the world; likewise fine and very smooth sheets of cork, which are used for tips of eigarettes, linings of hats and belinets and to some extent (curiously enough) for the printing of visiting cards.

Cork sawdust is used for making bricks. and, combined with coaldust and tar, for fuel briquettes; also for packing fruit. The extent of its consumption for this last purpose may be judged by the fact that each barrel of grapes exported contains eight pounds of the material, and annually the exportation of grapes from Spain amounts to 3,000,000 barrels.

Finally, the waste scraps of cork are pressed into bales, dried and shipped to France, England and the United States, where they are used for insulating and various other purposes.

D. A. Donofrio, a highly respected citizen of Phoenix, Ariz., of Mexican ancestry, heard the legend and learned the ritual when he was a small boy. It gave him the bint which led to the first real development of the manufacture of cactus eandy on a commercial basis. . The practical directions of the ritual virtually form the process which the sweetmeat is made in large quan-

Crews of trained workmen are sent out into the desert in motortrucks. They select cacti ranging from two to five feet high and shear them close to the ground. The thorns or spines are all trimmed off before the plant is hauled to the factory. There it is cut into circular slices an inch thick and each slice is again cut into small squares before it is sent to the sorting room. In the serting room experienced workers select the ripe pulp from that which is not suitable and send it to the cook, who boils it in plain water until the fiber is destroyed.

Next, it is cooked in sugar sirup and after it is removed it is allowed to solidify for two weeks. It is then cooked in its original strup again at a higher temperature and is allowed to solidify for six weeks. Finally it is cooked in another pure sugar sirup and is dipped in a crystal. The process of manufacture is then complete.

The perfected candy is a delectable sweetmeat. It is translucent and looks much like certain home-made marshmallows flavored

Caviar of Salmon Eggs

AN ENTERPRISING young woman of San Francisco, Miss Ida Tuholski, is putting ep-salmen eggs, in glass jars for caviar, and has found a ready sale for her product, which is found quite equal to the best commercial cavair derived from the sturgeon.

The Government Fisheries Burgau believes that the manufacture of salmon caviar will be an important radistry on the west coast at no distant day. As yet aprit is lacking. For andozen Years past caviar prepared from salmon roes has been shipped in large quantities from Siberia to Europe, where it meets with much favor.

For caviages the eggs should be taken from fresh caught fish. The work can be done to best advantage on scows anchored close to the fishing camps. To separate the eggs from the membrane that envelops then, they are rubbed through a wire screen into a trough, after which salt is added and the mass is mixed with the hands in a

Every year immense quantities of salmon eggs are thrown away in the Pacific coast fisheries. It is a deplorable waste. Salmon spawn, preserved in brine and packed in casks, makes the choicest and most successful bait in those waters, and would probably be excellent for mackerel fishing in the Atlantic.

Several establishments in Alaska are even now putting up salmon eggs in jars and cans for use as bait in sport fishing.

CONVINCED ABOUT ENGLAND—OF THE SAME OPINION STILL

An American Woman, Who Disliked Things English, Rediscovers Britain, With Its Mists, Its Greensward and Hedgerows, Hotels One Hates to Leave, Bad Coffee, Local Lore and Unequaled Hospitality

By Viola Irwin Williams

PERSIS is terribly British. For six years I have tried to understand why, being so terribly British, she remains so lovable; and I haven't yet found out. She is a large, ruddy, outdoors-looking person, and has written books about arts and wars and other phenomena. She is an expert on Chinese porcelains, also, and will speak of the Ming Dynasty with the casual intimacy that you would of the McKinley Administration.

We have always argued about my dislike of England and the English; and one evening, after a dinner party which had raised all my American bristles, we sat before her fire and had a thoroughly satisfactory, cozy quarrel about it. We ended by planning a three weeks' visit to England. Persis' object was to show me an England and Britons I could not but love, and she seemed to think the triumph and amusement. of this would be well worth while. For myself, I felt that adventuring with Persis -even in England-was certain to be de-

I felt myself, though (and I discovered later that Persis had the same qualms) that we were taking chances in planning to spend three weeks living so closely together.

Billy's attitude, as he saw me off at the Gare St. Lazare, was equally peevish and pessimistic. I gathered that I was a gid 'y weman abandoning her husband and two helpless babes for a certain-to-be-disastrous flight into the Unknown. With the air of one handing poison to a child he gave me my train ticket, my baggage checks, my boat ticket, my passport and a quantity of English money, which had cost a horrible

IN LONDON we had dinner at the Forum Club, the pleasantest woman's club I've ever seen, with such male characteristics as good food and deep chairs. Every one was so nice to me that my persistent sensation of being "Persis' American" must have been simple an auglophobia symptom. I was amused at dinner by the competently masculine criticism of her food by a famous woman perve specialist of eighty years. A delightful Scotch spinster, fastidiously ascetic in dress, told us the scientific way to make porridge. I think the point was that it must be stirred constantly with a spir-r-tle.

Our adventure really began as we left the Westminster Pier at 11 o'clock, on a Thames most for Richmond. A crowd waited with as at the pier-an orderly, silent crowd, in spite of its being a Sunday one. England wi'l never be democratic as France and alas America are. Her proletariat is everywhere, it seems to me, tainted with the aristocratic qualities of leisureliness and decent order even when in crowds.

At Windsor we slayed at the "White Hart." whose respectful windows lock upon the Cast'e. The "White Hart" has not a scrap of marble or gold on its facade; but, once you pass its chilly hall and very gor-Cous porter, you find deep rugs, softly gleaming old furniture and perfect cervice. For dinner we had a particularly grousy grouse, served by a butler who might well een a duke-even Persis said so. even volunteered that they don't do their dakes nearly so well, Persis waked me next morning by enthusing about the English turf. Of course, it is unrivaled. I suggested that this might be because it rains so much in England. But Persis said she didn't think so. She beheves. I know, that it is owing to some virtue inherent in the good English earth.

I asked Persis what particular kind or class of women it is who speaks in the tutolerably artificial hollow fashion that Americans notice as much as they do the Cockney She says quite seriously that they can't help it-that it is the result of a peculiar formation of the throat or palate. Of course, nothing we have in America, not even the Midd'e West nasal twang, can compare with the Cockney for sheer horror.

At breakfast the butler duke brought toast and marmalade, and returned in a few moments with bacon and eggs; but as he put them on the table I noticed how increasingly dukish he was getting, and felt that comething was wrong. I glanced at l'ersis. but her eyes were cast down. When he left, finally, I learned that one never nibbles toast and marmalade first. Such a thing had probably never before happened at the

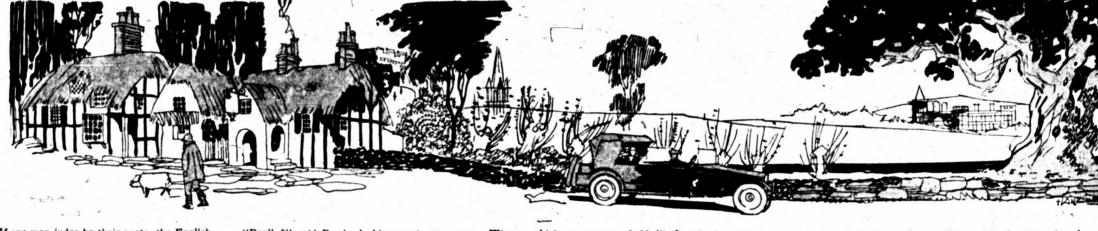

THE locks on the Thames are many, and some very deep, so that much time is spent in them. But at each lock was a garden, each quite different from and more beautiful than the preceding one. I have seldom seen anything so charming as the little lockkeeper's houses, each as tiny and neat as a ship's cabin, wearing their garden

At Henley there is a hotel called "The Red'Lion. so, of course, we stopped there. It faced the river, and its lovely rooms, of chintz and mahogany, were full of candlelight this within fifty miles of London! I hated tenving these hotels-and in no other country have I ever hated to leave a thotel.

I was very cold nearly all the time. The permanent damp chill of England got immediately into my bones. But I hated to tell Persis, because she asked me wonderingly ence about a mutual acquaintance, an American, who lived and even slept with closed windows, adding perfumed cigarettes to her sins. And I felt I must show that I'm quite different.

It began to rain as we took the boat for Oxford. But we sat on the covered deck until nearly lunch time. For this meal we stopped at Wallingford, a completely dismal little town, where we ate pale veal with watery sauce, potatoes cooked in water, vegetable marrow which was half water, blackberries and custard.

It rained all afternoon and got very cold. We were driven to the cabin. Persis showed me how to play patience, but I didn't seem to care about it. Then she gave me some volumes of poetry she had brought-Masefield, Rupert Brooke, Robert Bridges, etc.

If one may judge by their poets, the English more than any other people, love nature deeply and simply. In no other language, I imagine, have so many men waxed poetic over lying on sun-warmed grass beside a stream. One poem, by Frances Cornford, quite new to me, amused me very muchthe author is so horridly sure that no one could love the creature in question:

TO A LADY SEEN FROM A TRAIN Oh, why do you walk through the fields in gloves,

Missing so much and so much! Oh, fat white woman whom nobody loves, Why do you icalk through the fields in gloves When the gross is soft as the breast of doves And shivering seeet to the touch! Oh, why do you walk through the fields in Missing so much and so much?

TT RAINED continually during the two days we spent at Oxford. Persis said calmly that it nearly always rains at Oxford, I think because it is a valley with some peculiar atmospheric conditions. Even the rain, though, and the lot I'd heard of its perfection, could not spoil Oxford. And its beauty is living, something that is going on now, not just interesting relics of a past. Even better than Magdalen (pronounced Maudlin) College and the famous Water

"Really?" said Persis, looking most particularly British. "How fortunate that you're not-lit up-tonight; it must be so tiresome!"

It seemed to me by this time, that we had had quite enough dinner.

I noticed business-like looking rods over the windows of the Meadow Buildings, and asked Persis what they were for. "Those are awning supports,' she replied.

'Awnings? What for?' I inquired. But Persis' eye met mine firmly. 'To keep the sun off." she replied.

We left Oxford at 9:10 for Manchester. Our train was half a minute late in starting, and Persis remarked that the railway system of England was going to the dogs. At 10:30 the sun came out and stayed out.

We changed at Bletchley, and took a turn in the town, where the only remarkable thing we saw was a hot water bottle about half a yard square.

THE table d'hote is particularly rampant take just rolls or toast and coffee; also I am of a distinctly frugal turn of mind. especially since the war, and I bitterly resent consuming toast and (bad) coffee, and then paying for a course breakfast of porridge. fish, bacon and eggs, cold meats, etc., which I am apparently expected to do. and surprising.

MACAULAY says, Persis tells me, that the most beautiful cities of Europe are Oxford, Edinburgh and Genoa, in the order named. She added that Macaulay was not a particularly traveled person and that therefore his opinion was not worth much. I should certainly say that while Edinburgh has more character than most cities. and more beauty than many, its magnificent pre-eminence in this respect must be a purely native legend. We saw it on a fine, windy day (Glasgow, its hered rival, taunts that Edinburgh is as windy as its citizens). Our hotel win-In England-even at breakfast. I always dows looked directly across the gardens to the Castle set upon its great rock, and the famous Princes street, with the Scott monument halfway down its length. It was a Sunday, and in no New England town have I seen the Sabbath lid more firmly down. Hardly a sound from the streets; great difficulty in getting breakfast at so early an

We decided that the only thing to do in Edinburgh that morning was to go to service at 'St. Giles'. By great good luck we found an atheist cabby who climbed the steep street, past the Castle, to St. Giles'.

But we found St. Giles' as tightly closed as any godless building in Edinburgh. The only morning service was at 11, and until then the doors were locked on Sundays, though open weekdays. Persis could not explain this; or rather, she suggested that on Sunday morning the pious person is supposed to commune with his own soul, at home, until 11.

At 11 we followed the sedate groups that passed with pious disapproval through the Canongate, on their way to service. At St. Giles' an orderly, quiet, packed audience, in a nave stripped of every semblance of ernament. A stiff-necked preacher, with ravaged eyes in a bleak face, consciencetorn, hurled forth an impassioned, menacing

I found Edinburgh and her people dour; but I should think that men and women born and reared there would find it impossible to live elsewhere; that they would disdain and hate our flat towns and level countrysides. I don't think I could possibly live with the people-I am not of a Puritan temperament-but I have never seen country at once so grandly beautiful and so touchingly lovely that must make its exiles ache with longing for it.

NEXT morning very sadly we left Edinburgh bathed in soft blie veils and smoky sunlight, taking an ob ervation car across the mountains to Dalmally. And I began to see the outskirts of the real highlands-fields vellow, in late Sept mber, with uncut harvests, rolling up to great, slatecolored, craggy hills, with here and there the smoky depths of a tarn. Son a "Scotch mist" enveloped us; we could see it blowing in silver, airy sheets across the little valleys, veiling for moments the starkly gorgeous crags. Scarlet rowans-lined the brace, and little silver-gray streams traversed them.

At Dalmally, where we changed to a motor for Inverary, the rain was definite, and it persisted throughout the rest of the day. But it was the most extraordinary, flattering, vivifying rain I have ever seen. Without it, I think the gorgeous moorlands of rose-russet bracken and soft gold grass would have lost some of their bloom. The two hours' drive was an enchantment. We slipped past forest glades where deer, leaping to cover, yet stayed a moment to eye us; rabbits scuttled across the road before us. Burns, slender silver streaks against the brown, fell sheer from wooded heights, or slipped gurgling beside us, over narrow

The heather was almost gone-there remained just enough to add mauve to the gold and brown and green of the bracken. The glades were so alight with golden leaves that it looked like sunlight through the rain.

At Inverary, for the first time, I met the Highlander-I even glimpsed him swinging along his moors in full regalia. And although I heard horrid tales of the local breed, the Campbells, yet the specimens I saw were handsome, upstanding gentlemen, with the famous crooked mouth not too apparent, the eyes certainly too close together, yet keenly pleasant in the dark face.

CICOTEAND so fascinated me that I forgot, mostly, to observe Persis as I did in England. But I triumphantly constated that her reaction to it was the same as my own, only more so; and that she really loves Scotland much more than England. Within a mile of Edinburgh I noticed that her r's had begun to brr-r-rr.

Inverary is a town that makes your heart sink as you leave it. I have never read a description of Hell's Glen, or Glencroe Pass, but there must be many, so I will not, myself, attempt the impossible. As our car sped down the ribbon of road threading the really infernal. grandeur of the gloomy, naked glen, plaided shepherd haughtily guided their flocks from before us. So haughty were they, so persistently did they avoid any unseemly and tributary haste, that we missed our train at Arrochar. Which was a great blessing, for it gave us some hours at Loch Lomond. From Arrochar we meandered down Loch Fune to Glasgow.

On the way we met a very old and very friendly gentleman, who rejuvenated visibly by twenty years on learning that we were from Paris. He had visited Paris in 1867 for the Exposition, and that had evidently remained for him the great event of his youth. He asked us if Gallignani's Messenger was still appearing; and spoke of the marvelous things to be seen in Paris such as the Artesian Well at Grenelle. Neither of us had the courage to admit that we had never seen this-nor heard of it.

At Glasgow Persis' friend, Neil Munro, vivid. the author-hero of Inverary and all the country round, awaited us. I discovered to my surprise that so much adulation had apparently not spoiled him-or, at least, only a very little.

We stayed three days at Glasgow because Persis was obliged to do some work. The three days were "fine"-that is to say, it did not rain, and everybody was proud that we should see that the weather there was. after all, basely maligned. In the shops some one would say to the visiting stranger: "A fine day, isn't it?" proudly. I would smile as brightly as I could and assent, and then go forth into the gray day, my eyes smarting from the sulphury atmosphere, my spirits getting lower and lower from the gloom of it all. I learned afterward that the total fall of soot and smuts in Glasgow in 1914 was more than fifteen hundredweight per acre, and for once statistics were to perfectly vivid.

FROM Glasgow we sped directly to London, a long, tiresome journey. And the day after, Billy alighted, a little bewildered, ruffled and quite deaf, from a flight from Paris in an open plane. And it was decided that we should return to Paris in one of the Airco "limousine" biplanes.

Billy in London is hopelessly grumpy. He hates the city; above all, I think, the lack of any sort of "life" in its atmosphere, both literally and figuratively. Being rather more dependent on sunshine than most people, in London he is at his worst. I was horribly disappointed to gather that he was utterly and frankly uninterested in anything. I had seen or done. His whole attitude was, "Well, that is over! Now we can get on to something else!"

It is one thing to read about the world's progress in air travel, to watch the great metal birds pass far above our heads. It is quite another to fly, yourself, for the first time. I imagine no other adventure, nowadays, can compare with it.

At Croydon, our starting place, there

But we did rise into the air. We rose and rose until Croydon and its fields were a flat Christmas tree garden below us; we rose clear of the silver mist above Croydon, up and up into cold, clear sunlight, three thousand feet. Almost immediately the green fields and ribbon roads were blotted out; below us lay the thick, even blanket of fog cozily covering all East England nearly to the coast.

I was traveling faster than ever before in my life, more than one hundred miles an hour, but there was only the sense of quite ordinary speed. Only the almost solid rush of air past the open window made the fact

I am a good ocean traveler, but the English Channel has often worsted me. Now, we crossed it in ten minutes—a level green streamlet with crisp white edges, a fishing fleet thrown like peanut shells on one side.

There being no fog, we flew lower now, and faster. Departments of France swept like cinema scenes underneath. Then, like a suddenly turned on bathroom shower, rain drenched the planes and windows, whisked off instantly by the implacable wind rush. and passing as a drifting cloud behind us. The airplane seemed to fly as definitely level as a train, except when we dropped six or eight hundred feet, when the sensation was something like that in a suddenly brought up elevator.

S WE approached Paris nothing was to A be seen, not even the Eiffel Tower. It was raining, and I reflected how pleased Persis would be to know that we'd left England in sunshine and reached sunny France

From the landing field at Le Bourget an Airco automobile deposited us before our door in Paris within half an hour. We deposited our luggage and hastened to a favorite restaurant nearby. The waiter, as we entered, led the way to our own particular table in a corner. And as I slid back on the red leather banquette I already knew, down to the last detail, what I should eat. I'd been planning it ever since my last English meal-salty little Belon oysters, a vol-auvent, some meat other than mutton or beef. a dressed salad. Billy remarked with some slightly irritating triumph upon my unusual interest and appreciation of my food. Though naturally, just back from England" . . he conceded.

And now that it is over, Persis, who returns to Paris next week, will say in effect :. "There, now-that is England. Don't you like it better? Don't you admit that you were prejudiced-ignorant? Don't you remark that if sometimes we are awfully

And, as in a railway station, the group of passengers divided up and took their respective places, some for Holland, some for Belgium, some for Paris. There was the excited novice, making her first trip. There was the classic gentleman, who was "crossing" for the nth time. There was one passenger (an American, naturally) who was returning to Paris in the same plane, having had an hour at London. speaks of the French.) Well, no, no, and no! I don't like England any better. And I am sincerely sorry that I don't. I keenly realize that the English are our kin, that we have all sorts of great, racial, fundamental things in common. I feel that the Anglo-Saxons should present an unbroken, if dissimilar, front to the world. But-I don't like England, and on the whole I don't like the English, though I'm perfectly able and willing to admire them immensely.

I think it is the universal, utterly unconscious, intolerable national complacency that so gets on the stranger's nerves. The Oxford accent was the best, and the Oxford coffee the worst, that I encountered. At Oxford one stops at the Mitre. As sat in the dusky quiet of its dining room, I could easily fancy the centuries of proud parents who had "gone up" to Oxford to assist at the blessoming forth of their progeny. I noticed, in a glass case against the wall, a spoon and several other eating ntensils. I imagined they had been used once by some one very Olympic indeed, and I didn't ask for fear of being disillusioned. The Mitre is full of amusing little flights of steps, and its beds make no concessions to a degenerate and soft-living generation. Its walls are decorated with some beautiful old pewter, and views of Oxford town. But

At dinner we found at our small table a middle-aged American in gray tweed. He recognized me, with flattering satisfaction, as a fellow countrywoman, and opened up a conversation, apropos of passing the salt. with the desperate cagerness only displayed by the homesick traveler of whatever country. Nearly all the food seems really very bad to the ordinary visitor. The universal tea is good, and breakfast also, if one is equal to consuming it, and takes ten instead of coffee. As we peared Manchester Persis tried to give me some notions about it, discovering that I had none. She says there is a great deal of local pride - a sort of "see Manchester and die attitude. She says cotton manufacture is the great industry, and that the town is extraordinarily prosperous and flourishing.

Afterward, at a bridge party, which I gathered had been specially planned because an American was to be there, "and they always play bridge," I was forced to confess that I did not!

The charming hospitality in this house was queerly matter-of-fact, and made me remember a story of an American youth who went to an English house party having never met his host. The guest, next morning, found himself alone in the breakfast room, save for another man apparently absorbed in his eggs, and bacon. The youth watched for an opportunity to say goodmorning, but the other's attitude made such a barrier against even so slight an intrusion that the guest resigned himself to an apparent incivility on his own part, ate his breakfast and departed. Later in the day some one mentioned the stranger to his host, pointing him out. "Oh, really," said the host, "is that Mr. Blank? I want to meet him at once. He's a corking chap-I liked him immensely at first sight!"

We had "perfect weather" in Manchester. This means the palest sun I've ever seen, and air so thick that a light veil fell on everything more than twenty yards away. The effect was not unpleasing. But my eyes smarted continually from the dust and sulphur-laden air.

Leaving Manchester by train we passed through a dreary, dreary country on our way to Edinburgh. I think the worst of the huddled, black, sordid little towns we passed Holcolm swam into the youthful congress of Loon Lake Jan as a young god deigning to slip away from Clympus for a secon to taste mortal adulation. His "a" was the broader, his pumps the narrowest, his skoulders the widest, and his purse the longest at that resort of superlative youthful eristocracy. Had it been Utab instead of New Hampshire, he sould have acquired a brilliant harem of palpitating heirenses.

YES, pudgy Senator Holcomb, unable off-hand to snumerate all his directorates and clubs, many times looked back with a oigh from the tangled perplexities of succonful maturity to that one selden summer. On a certain sultry August night Helcolm was affeat in a cance with the pretty

His Panama, crushed flat back in front, lay at his feet as he paddled lasily, cuffs turned back just enough to reveal the bronzed muscles of his forearms, his fine eyes feasting upon the little arrangement of organdie, rib-bons, eyebrows, French beels, Suffy bair, rose and cream that nature and art colleborate in designing for the confusion of Scraping softly on the sandy beach below the grove, Holcomb dragged the cance and its fairy freight high and dry, and the young couple sauntered up to the rustic temple of Terpsichers, seating themselves on the beach that ran about the inside of the waist-high sheathing.

UNTIL their arrival the lade and lessies had been having a good time. Suddenly their pleasure took wing.
It would have asteniahed Holcomb and

It doesn't matter what it was-it antedated the original tango, and would today be considered toe prim and stiff. Then it was the newest thing out, and eighty-four eyes glued themselves to the pair. This because there happened to be twenty-one couples present.

I should have said eighty-six eyes; but of this anon. One by one, their courage returning, others took the floor, and presently a little of the former good cheer returned. With the visitors no longer acting an more speciators sourage revised.

It was on the second tour of the pavillen, near the outer edge, that Helcomb became aware of a low, coarse voice which came from directly outside the paling. He did not at first pay any attention to the actual words, and even when he did it did not occur to him that they could be possibly intended for them.

'Hey, wou! You thar in the white pasts!

Holcomb, exceedingly annayed, led Bat-lie to a part of the bench at a safe distance, and turned back to meet the Ill-brad rustic who had dared to address him. He had but a few stops to take, for the other fellow started forward to meet him.

"Were you speaking to me, my good man?" said Holcomb in his chilliest, most cultured drawl. "I was sure and am."

"Do you not know how to address a gen. "Dunne. Never tried."

Holcomb colored, conscious of a wave of power in clutching hands, although he had been tackled by many a raging back on the football field. He no longer "pulled" his punches once he was so weapped and trussed sinewy arms that he could scarcely breathe, let alone break frae.

With rude cunning the constable twisted his wrist behind his back, palm outward, until something told him that further resistance would result only in a dislocated elbow or even shoulder. Past the Japanese lanterns, into the cheerless night, he went, he knew not whither.

Some Afteen minutes later he was thrust into a little single-roomed brick hut, with barred window, a plank, with a pair of horse-blankets on it, a pail and a pitcher of water. She rose early after a sleepless night and spread the tidings of Holcomb's debacle. The inn reeled under the blow. All the accompanying features of dethrened idols, punctured creeds, wrecked dynasties, were here present in miniature.

A few chosen spirits among the more resourceful of the males gathered themivelves together to organise a rescue party when Holcomb himself crept in, unshaved, dishonored and unstrung. His eyes were wild, his trouvers soiled and torn. The flowing tie had tlown away-the Panama appeared later by the hand of a village lad.

Formatities had been brief, when, in the morning, he appeared before the justice of the peace. The constable had testified without pomposity or rancer.

There came a time when Bemis did not rise after a knockdown; and the four climbed back into their car and waited. Presently the constable got unsteadily to his feet; staggered to his mowing machine and climbed with difficulty up to his iron porch.

Albrecht and the Egg

LBRECHT DURER was a brown spantel. It was Mary who gave him this name; and she gave it because he looked very much like the dog in the print of "The Knight and Death" which hung over the chimneypiece in Tom's study. She could not very well call the dog after the picture, so she gave him the artist's name. Tom and Many lived in a little country cottage, and they brought up Albrecht Durer according to the directions given in a little book called "Our Friend the Dog." They also kept a few hens, treating them according to the advice given in another book called "Profits

From Poultry." The book about the dog was a good book and Albrecht flourished. The poultry book did not seem to be a good book, for there never were any eggs. This puzzled Tom and Mary. Hens never lay eggs for people who trust to books, but Tom and Mary did not know this. They believed their book and read it over and over, trying to find out where they had gone wrong in the manage-

Light came to them at last, but oddly enough from the dog book, not the poultry book. Tom came on a paragraph headed "Dogs enting eggs Cure of." It appeared that dogs sometimes developed a taste for raw eggs and ate them straight out of the neets. Spaniels were particularly given to By George A. Birmingham this kind of wickedness. This made everything clear. Tom and Mary had made so mistakes. Their hens were actually laying eggs, but Albrecht was eating them. The cure, according to the book, was startle. Fill an empty egg with liquid mustard. Leave it in the hen's nest where the der will find it. He will never eat another ogs."

TOM and Mary hated to think of how much Albrecht would sufer, but the path of duty was plain. Mary bought an egg and Tom blew it, as he had blown blackbirds eggs when he was a boy. Mustard was poked into the empty shell with a hairpin. Then Mary cried softly and Tom sat in gloomy silence, thinking of the torture which awaited their dear dog. Albrecht lay at Mury's feet and looked at her with loving eyes, not knowing what lay before him.
On Sunday morning Ten laid the dreadful egg in the hen's seet. Then he and Mary went to church. They heped, in this way.

They did not dore to call Albrecht or to go and look for him when they came back. They sat down on a sept at the far side of the lawn, trembling with anxiety, because they loved the dog. Very soon Albrecht appeared, trotting along from the direction of the hen run. He was wagging his tail and his long care hung gracefully almost to the ground. Mary saw at once that he was very happy and greatly pleased with himself. H trotted straight up to her and deposited the egg on her lap. He had found it and be knew that it was a treasure. With the enderest care be thid carried it in his mouth. With pride and joy he gave it to his mistrose.

Tom shouted with gladness. "Good dog," he said. "Good Albrucht, Mary, we were wrong to suspect him. He never took our eggs. He wouldn't. This proves it. Albrecht Durer, you leave the court without a stain on your character."

Mary, though she loved the dog as well as Tom did, was not so happy. Albrecht's character was mainless. Her dress was not, and it was a pale gray Sunday dress of great beauty. Albrecht curvied the egg enfely all the way from the next best, but at the last moment, in dropping it on Mary's lap, he broke it. Mary looked sadly at the front of her skirt.

LAST NIGHT'S DREAMS: WHAT THEY MEAN DIEYOU DREAM OF TROUBERS!

dream of a pair of trousers is said by most of the mystic interpreters to be security. For a man to dream that he is putting on an pair of trousers, says the oracles, means—if he is young and unmared that he will soon lead to the altar the object of his affections. It also means that his marriage will be a most fortunate one and that prosperity will be his lot. For either a man or woman to dream of mending a pair of trousers is said to foretell minor family discords or other. domestic troubles of a passing nature.

Many of the oracles say that any one who dreams of a pair of trousers will enjoy the confidence of his friends and acquaintances and will lead a quiet and comfortable life. A few of the oracles, while not denying the general beneficient signification of a dream of a pair of trousers, assert that the dream is a warning to the dreamer to be very circumspect with regard to his manner of life.

To dream of getting your trousers en "wrong side out" is said to indicate that the dreamer will soon form an attachment which will be lasting.

The Housewife's Economy Calendar THE BOON OF SPORT CLOTHES.

When is a woman too old to wear sports clothes? This means, of course, straight, simple, séparate skirts, smart, washable blouses, sweaters, lowheeled oxfords or pumps of the sports type and simple organdle, gingham, straw, ribbon or lightweight felt hats trimmed with a fold of ribbon or a bow, or some-

One thing is certain—that there are few things that make a woman look worse, few things that should be avoided as religiously by the middle-aged woman, as the get-up that is part sports and part other, wise. If you wear your sweater, skirt, and sport-haf combination. don't wear high-heeled shoes just because you think they make your feet . look smaller and therefore younger. If you are clad in a frilly light organdie frock, don't wear flat sport oxfords just because they are comfortable. There are other comfortable shoes this season besides sport shoes. Don't top off a sports costume with an ostrich feather trimmed hat.

But if you are consistent about It, and select sport things that are becoming, there is no age limit to the fashion. No one nowadays feels that sport clothes should be restricted to the woman who actually the tennis court. The woman of seventy can watch her granddaughters from the clubhouse verands, and she and they may both be appropriately got up in the sport skirt sweater combination. Every once in a while you hear a woman who has become discouraged over the problem of dressing money come to this conclusion: "I am not going to fusetany longer. I buy the clothes I want and life is too short to try to make them. For the present I am just going to wear sport clothes. The are always easy and economical."

So the mode persists and shops have a persistent demand for separate skirts of homespun and silk or cotton poplin, and sweaters do not stay long on the counters. Sport shoes are best sellers everywhere and the fashion for which extinction was predicted eighteen months ago, is with us still.

AMETHYST,

WHE owner of an amethyst is promised happiness and love, especially if the stone is worn onthis day, since it is both the talismanic gem and natal stone. THE CREDIT MAN.

To be a credit man is not So difficult a task-It merely means to answer what Most anyone may ask Concerning anybody who's In business anywhere Who any article may choose To purchase here and there.

He has to know the good and bad. The honest but the slow, What credit they've already had, How far we ought to go; The little fellow who is rich,

The big one who is poor— He has to know whom, what and The slow, the slow but sure

He has to see we never sell To those who never pay. And still be careful, just as well, To turn no trade away: He has to see we never ship To someone who may fail, Yet on the business hold our grip And never miss a sale.

To be a credit man, my friend, A credit to the firm, The honest you must not offend, But make the others squirm. You need some simple qualities Yet all you need to have are these To be a credit man:

The judgment of a Jupiter. The patience of a saint, The mind of a philosopher In hearing some complaint,

Ability to prophesy And mortal minds to read-In fact, a credit man to be All these are all you need.

Facts About Your Name; Its History; Its Manning; Whomas It Was Derived; Its Significance; Your Lucky Day and Lucky Jewel. OPHELLA.

OF all the fanciful names which appeal to feminine taste, Ophelia possesses perhaps the tenderest memories. Though the name signifies "serpent," only romance, youth, and tragic misfortune is ever connected with it. mologists declare that Ophelia is an out-and-out invention of akespeare. Certainly her claim to immortality is based upon the touching story of the bard of Avon

Dane of "Hamlet." Without her

"rosemary for rembrance," Ophella would still exist among those who are readers of Shakespeare. It is possible that Ophelia is a translation of the old Ormilda. orthern appellative derived from the serpent names through the Greek "ophis." There is no other explanation of her existence, unless she was purely an invention of Shakespeare, although a woman does appear in the old story of Amleth. The curious coincidence is should have placed her in the land chiefly favoring serpentine names. The opal is the gem assigned to Ophelia. The unfortunate influence hich it is said to exert for others will prove a talisman against the very eyil if Ophelia wears it. It will bring her good fortune and her heart's desire. Monday is her lucky day and 5 her lucky number. The chrysanthemum is her flower.

appearance through being made of striped silk.

The sketch shows a gown which has created much admiration and many imitators. It is of dark blue and white silk; the white stripe is narrow and the blue is wide.

This garment is as shapeless as chemise and is tied around the waist with a rolled belt of blue and rhite. Its ouffs and collars are unusual. The fact that they are made of white organdy is of slight importance. We have become tomed to seeing this fabric applied to half the gowns on the continent it is the shape that the organd: takes which attracts attention. The ollar is a kind of Cromwellian affair dropping to deep points in front and rising to the chin; the cuffs are merely wide bands flaring at the wrists and attached to the upper sleeve at the elbow.

This is a simple form through which to express the fashion of striped silk. The young people are wearing period gowns of it with immense skirts, some covered with small ruffes, others shirred at the hips and hanging in deep points at the sides. There are square coats of striped silk, lined with crepe de chine in a solid color and there are separate skirts in variously colored stripes which are gathered to sligh short bodices of solid colored satin

It is no longer considered odd to put a rose pink and gray striped silk skirt below a tight bodice of rose pink taffeta with an 1870 neck-This decolletage has become important after a year of experimenting. It is not often accepted by the middle-aged woman, but youth likes it and has popularized it

Another way in which striped silk is used is in the slip which goes beneath a transparent frock. A gray Georgette crepe trock is made with and placed over a tight, narrow slip of mauve and cream striped silk a green Georgette gown, and another one of green organdy, are dropped over scalloped slips of grey and green stripes. Dressmakers de not hesitate to use striped crepe and chiffon over slips of solid color, and these are often scalloped at the hem, or maybe run with flat flounces of After one sees several of these picture frocks and has become familiar with the fantastic manner

There's nothing fundamentally the matter with the man, except that he is a little too human. He has made money a little too rapidly, perhaps, and perhaps he is a little too pleasure-loving, but he is the kindest and most generous soul alive, and one of the sort who wants everybody to like him, and pat nim on the back, and share in his good

That type of man can no more live without the accompaniment of the slad hand than a flower can live without sunshine. He is as naively vain as a child. He wants to be old at every turn how good-looking and wonderful he is and he turns as instinctively toward those who feed him on sugar plums as the needle turns to the north pole.

The wife understands the elementary principle of masculine psychology that every girl baby is ness, and his ambition, and his wife taught in the cradle, and that is that vinegar never catches the male fly. Also, she is perfectly well aware that if it is true that every man has a sweet tooth, her husband was born with a double row of them, but in spite of her expert information on the subject, she has clamped the lid down hard and fast on the candy box, and refuses to hand him out having the time of her life while even a single bonbon.

In all the husband's little world plans and freams.

there is just one discordant voice.

Oh, no man has Everybody else he knows tells him howelever and marvelous he is, except his wife. The only criticisms he has to listen to come from his cold cloths until she takes the wife. Everybody, so far as he swelling out of his head. And, more knows, admires him, except his wife. It's only when he goes home that he of the dust he is.

The result is exactly as one would expect it so be. The easy-going, good-natured fellow, who likes to be joilied along, is following the line of least resistance and drifting farther and farther away every day from his stem mentor. He finds husiness excuses for being away from the home where he hears unpleasant things, and he basks in the society of women who do not feel any obligations to remind him of his shortcomings.

Therefore, every woman who has a husband whom she wants to keep had better face this fact, that she's got to play her husband's game. If he craves amusement, she must play with him, or some other woman will. If he wants understanding and companionship, she must chum with him, or some other woman will. And she must home or elsewhere. Especially men. A woman is more or lehse dependent upon her husband for her mental and spiritual pabulum, but no man is dependent upon his wife. If he desires to amuse himself and his wife won't play with him, he has no difficulty in finding plenty of sportively-inclined ladies who are willing to divert themselves in his society. If he likes to be flattered and jollied, and his wife declines to be a salve spreader, there are legions of sirens with honeyed tongues who are just waiting for a chance to sing to him.

He admits that he has a method, A secret! in making his selections.

HE FINDS OUT WHAT KIND OF mother. A MOTHER A BOY HAS, and pays no attention to the father. In the course of a long business life he has made few exceptions to this rule.

This theory of Mr. Vauclain has a negative as well as a positive side.

It explains not only why so many undistinguished fathers have distinguished sons, but also why so many fathers who are failures have sons who are successful.

There are two sides to the question. For one thing there is a tendency on the part of a boy to derive his predominant traits from his

For another, the mother is obviously more instrumental than the father in creating the environment which plays a large part in the developnt of the sons.

In the average home the proble of providing a minimum of income-which is the duty of the father—is much less complicated than the probem of making both ends meetwhich is the problem of the mother. Long before statesmen ever dreamed of a budget system, that method was familiar to the women. In one generation after another they

Mr. Vauciain's plan of selection will serve its purpose in the great majority of instances. He is safe in concluding that if the boy had the right kind of a mother he can count on his being the right kind of a boy.
