LYDD-GEORGE FIRM IN ATTITUDE TAKEN IN IRISH QUESTION

CANNOT CONFER WITH REPRESENTATIVES AS FROM SOVEREIGN STATE

FURTHER DISORDERS IN BELFAST FRIDAY NIGHT

Two Boys Are Wounded and Troops Are Called Out to Quell the Disturbance

BELFAST, Sept. 17.—Two boys were wounded during serious disorders in the Vere street district last night. Troops were rushed to the scene and a man who interfered with them received a bayonet wound.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Prime Minister Lloyd George, replying to the communication of Eamonn de Valera on Friday, says that to receive the Sinn Fein delegates to the proposed conference as an independent and sovereign state would "constitute formal and official recognition of Ireland's severance from the king's dominions."

Lloyd George says that so long as Mr. de Valera insists that the Irish delegates should confer as the representatives of an independent and sovereign state a conference is impossible.

TELEGRAM OF DE VALERA CHANGES THE SITUATION

By Associated Press.

GLASGOW, SCOTLAND, Sept. 17.—The receipt of the telegram from Eamonn de Valera's telegram yesterday in which the Irish leader expressed the view that the peace negotiations should meet untrammelled by any conditions "except those imposed by the facts as they know them," is considered to have brought about a change in the situation.

It has opened up the possibility that the prime minister may reply to this communication before consulting his cabinet, which he has announced his intention of doing before taking any further steps in connection with Irish affairs.

Mr. Lloyd-George passed a good night at his vacation home here and was very much better this morning. The dentist called to Gairloch having lanced the abscess which caused his indisposition. The date of his return to London, however, has not yet been fixed and the next meeting of the cabinet—whether it meet in London or otherwise—depends upon the rate of his progress.

IRISH SITUATION ASSUMES MUCH MORE HOPEFUL TURN

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Sinn Fein acceptance of membership in the British commonwealth as the basis of negotiations with the British government, as seen in the only way out of the present Irish situation and deadlock by London newspapers, although the prospects which London or Irish republicans would mean that peace was in sight, the newspaper adding that, "unlike the Sinn Fein does accept, peace is unattainable."

"There is satisfactory evidence in both English and Irish newspapers," declared the Daily News, "that the ridiculous dispute which brought a temporary abandonment of the Inverness conference is not likely to have any serious or permanent effects." "The Daily Express" asserted that "juggling with a phrase" led to the deadlock, but said there was little doubt that since receiving Mr. de Valera's latest letter the British government would "find means to accommodate Mr. de Valera and his friends."

"Public opinion in Ireland," said the newspaper, "made this step on the part of the Sinn Fein leader inevitable. The Irish situation assumes a more hopeful turn, since de Valera in his telegram yesterday, seemed to place a different construction on his own words in the opinion of the London Times. This newspaper said patience and good will should solve the immediate problem and it believed Mr. Lloyd-George might well accept Mr. de Valera's contention for a conference without conditions, and name the earliest possible day for it."

ANOTHER BIG WELL IS REPORTED NEAR MEXIA; EQUAL TO DUEISENBURG

Word has been received in this city, that the Kirby Oil company of Houston has brought in a well on the Numbum tract in the Mexia field that equals if not surpasses the famous Dueisenburg well that came in with an initial flow of 25,000 barrels, and which was purchased by the Magnolia Petroleum company only this week for $1,100,000.

This new well is 11 miles southwest of the Dueisenburg well and one mile northwest of the Bethelton No. 1 that is producing around 5,000 barrels. Contrary to the reports of geologists, this test was drilled on the west side of the ridge, a locality considered un-

SEYMOUR, TEXAS, Sept. 17.—With indications of fair weather this morning, it is expected that the attendance at the Baylor county fair on this, the closing day, will surpass even Friday's record when tickets at the gate showed an attendance of more than nine thousand persons during the day, to which should be added several thousand who attended at night.

Fair officials and leading citizens of Seymour today expressed themselves as more than pleased at the visit of the Wichita Falls delegation, numbering several hundred, Friday. They were surprised at the large number who came and were delighted with the fair, which was one of three bands playing Friday, the Seymour and Gore, bands being regularly engaged for the fair.

Officials who will be expected by fair officials for the accounts of the fair appearing in The Times. They said that without the help given by the fair, the fair could not have been the great success it has been.

Rodeo events including bronco busting, steer and sheep riding and cow-boy racing, and the completion of the judging of the exhibits will constitute the day's program, and Seymour's biggest entertainment of her history will come to a close with a dance on her newly paved streets tonight.

Wichita Falls visitors at the fair Friday expressed surprise at the extent and quality of the livestock and other exhibits which are truly a credit to Baylor county, her farmers and the fair management.

The rodeo events have gathered in Seymour a great aggregation of cow-punchers and ranchmen, to whom the saddle, the lariat and the branding iron are familiar and every-day objects of life. The rodeo differed from others in that all who participated were genuine cowmen and not professionals.

Among those who took part in Friday's program were: Bert Scott, Archer City; W. C. Curlee, Hot Springs; J. E. Smith, Dundee; Frank Guinn, Dundee; C. C. De Graff, Breckenridge; J. T. AMERICAN RELIEF WORKERS LEAVE LONDON FOR RIGA

ST. PAUL, Sept. 17.—Little dabs of cheap molasses on plain pine sticks in the hands of 61 oil inspectors in Minnesota have saved users of gasoline thousands of dollars the past year, according to Hjalmar Nilsson, state oil inspector. Incidentally, this simple test for discovering water in gasoline has gone out from Minnesota to a dozen other states.

On the theory that water is heavier than gasoline and always sinks to the bottom, Mr. Nilsson devised the simple test a year ago. A stick dipped in cheap molasses glides through gasoline without showing any effect on the molasses. But when water is encountered the molasses comes off the stick. When the stick is withdrawn the exact amount of water in the bottom of the tank is clearly revealed.

DEPUTY SHERIFF CAPTURES A HOT STILL IN NEWTOWN

Deputy Sheriff Weaver captured a hot still at Newtown Friday evening and arrested J. P. Noble as the owner and operator of the device. The still was in a three-room house in the oil town.

Little drops of corn whiskey were trickling from the worm into a vessel that contained several pints of the finished product. A small amount of mash outside that which was in the still was also confiscated.

"SAFETY FIRST" IS L. G.'s VACATION MOTTO

GALE RENOUNCES HIS COMMUNIST ACTIVITY, IS SEEKING CLEMENCY

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Linn A. E. Gale, whose communist activities in Mexico attracted attention and who is now held on Governor's island on a charge of evading the draft, has renounced his radical beliefs and is attempting to obtain clemency.

Military authorities at Governor's island said today that no official cognizance had been taken of Gale's promises to sever connections with the radical movement and give certain evidence against his former fellow radicals and that he probably would be placed on trial within the next 30 days.

The charge on which Gale will be tried results from his induction in the draft at Albany, after which he fled to Mexico, where he published his magazine. He was deported by President Obregon's orders and arrested at Laredo, Texas.

UNMASKED BANDITS GET $28,000 FROM SELLS FLOTO CIRCUS

PORTLAND, ORE., Sept. 17.—Three unmasked robbers held up the Sells-Floto circus treasurer late last night at Vancouver, Wash., and obtained between $28,000 and $30,000 in cash and drafts, according to a report to the Vancouver police by Jose Condon, legal adjutant for the circus.

The robbers were said to have knickered down Mrs. Grace Hamnerford, 66, and her son, who objected to the search of his mother.

This money was being transferred from the circus grounds to the safe in the treasury car in the railroad yards. The transfer was being made in a motor truck.

The robbers escaped in an automobile.

CLERGYMAN CANNOT MARRY A DIVORCED WOMAN TO RECTOR

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Bishop Manning has ruled that no clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal church may officiate at a marriage ceremony for the Rev. Dr. Percy Stekney Grant, rector of the Church of the Ascension, and his fiancée, Mrs. Rita de Costa Lydie.

Dr. Grant's vestrymen are not inclined to interfere with his matrimonial plans, and he is the only one who has taken up the question of the ecclesiastical irregularity, with the bishop it is stated.

Mrs. Lydie obtained a divorce from W. E. D. Stokes, whom she married when she was 19 years old, and later from Major Philip M. Lydie. One of these divorces was on the grounds of incompatibility. The cause in the other suit was one which, under the canons of the church, does not prevent remarriage of the innocent party.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF NEW GAS THAT IS A FEATURE OF PETROLIA FIELD

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Procurement of a dirigible of the Zeppelin type—from Germany if possible—to replace the lost ZR-2, and continuation of construction of ZR-1, now building at Lakehurst, N. J., was recommended today to President Harding and Secretaries Denby and Weeks by the official national advisory committee for aeronautics.

Continued production of helium, the new gas used for inflating airships, also was recommended by the committee, which is composed of army and navy officers, Charles F. May, chief of the weather bureau, Orville Wright, and Dr. Charles D. Walcott, secretary of the Smithsonian institute, chairman.

The committee also recommended that "rigid airships have been primarily developed in Germany as a result of persistent efforts which could not be practical in this country because of the expense of one serious accident when it is possible to profit by any mistakes that were made."

Only Large Store of Helium.
The committee then pointed out that "America possesses the only large store of helium known to the world, the use of which airships can be more successfully developed by America than by any other country for commercial as well as military purposes."

It would be contrary to the true American spirit," the committee said in referring to the ZR-2 disaster, "to abandon a constructive program because of one serious accident when it is possible to profit by any mistakes that were made."

(Fatty) Arbuckle, accused of murder in connection with the death of Miss Virginia Rappe, motion picture actress, today, but was continued until Monday, September 20.

The witness tampering investigation of the jury will be held in the case of Miss Zeh Prevost, one of the principal witnesses against Arbuckle to tell to the jury the alleged facts that she detailed to the police and the district attorney. As a result of her failure to testify, the jury was compelled to postpone for 24 hours a decision to indict Arbuckle. The Story of a Thief, One Hundred Thousand Dollars and a Girl

THE STORY
Dave Henderson, as Bookie Skidmore's confidential man, is sent to Martin Tydemann to get $100,000 to recoup racing losses. He steals the money and calmly serves his sentence of five years without disclosing the place where he has hidden it, in an old pigeon hole, despite the fact that Detective Barjan and Skidmore both visit him in jail, each trying to wring from him his secret with opposite purposes. Just before his term expires he confides in Milman, a prison mate, who is freed five months earlier and who promises to get the loot and meet Henderson at the St. Lucien Hotel in New York at 8 o'clock in the evening of July 23. He immediately resigns his office in his determination, and when he leaves the prison he is almost hopelessly overcome by Milman, although almost immediately he finds both the police and the old man on his trail. He succeeds in momentarily throwing off his pursuers when he enters the home of Nicola Capriano, an old bedridden Italian, formerly a gang leader, who lives alone with his daughter Teresa in San Francisco. Having been sent by one to whom the old man owes much, he succeeds in winning from him a promise of an escape and he is ordered to change his clothes while the daughter makes arrangements for the next move, at the old man's directions.

"Me Emmanuel," he said complacently, in broken English. "You no give-a damn for da police any more, I gotta da room where you hide—safe. See? Over da restaurant. You eat, you sleep, you give-a da cop da laugh."

"Some boy, Emmanuel!" he said—and flung himself down on the seat. "Go to it!"

NICOLA CAPRIANO'S eyes were closed; the propped-up form on the pillows was motionless—only the thin fingers plucking at the coverlet with curiously patient insistence bore evidence that the man was not asleep.

Suddenly he smiled; and his eyes opened, a dreamy, smoldering light in their depths. His hands reached out for the morning paper that lay on the bed beside him, and for the second time since Teresa had brought him the paper half an hour before, he pored for a long while over a leading "story" on the front page. It had nothing to do with the disturbance in Vinetto's saloon of the night before; it dealt with a strange and mysterious bomb explosion in a downtown park during the small morning hours, which, besides awakening and terrifying the immediate neighborhood, had, according to the newspaper account, literally blown a man and, with the man, the bench on which he had evidently been sitting under an arc light, to pieces. The victim was mutilated beyond recognition; all that the police had been able to identify were fragments of a bomb, thus establishing the cause of the accident or more likely, as the paper hinted, murder.

"The fool!" Nicola Capriano whispered. "It was Ignace Ferroni—the fool! And so he would not listen to old Nicola—eh?"

He chuckled out suddenly, his laugh shrill and high echoing through the room. "Well, perhaps it is as well, eh, Ignace? Perhaps it is as well—perhaps you will be of some service, Ignace, now that you are dead, eh, Ignace—which is something that you never were when you were alive!"

He laid the paper down, and again his eyes closed, and again the blue-tipped fingers resumed their interminable plucking at the coverlet.

OUTSIDE somewhere in the hall he could hear Teresa moving about, busy with her morning work. He listened intently—not to his daughter's movements, but for a footstep on the pavement that, instead of passing by, would climb the short flight of steps to the front door.

"Well, why do they not come—eh?" he muttered impatiently. "Why do they not come?"

He relaxed into silence, but he no longer lay there placidly with his eyes closed. A strange excitement seemed to be growing upon him. It tinged the skin under his beard with a hectic flush, and the black eyes glistened and glistened, as they kept darting objectiveless glances here and there around the room.

Perhaps half an hour passed, and then the sick man began to mutter again: "Will they make me send for them—the fools!" He apostrophized the foot of the bed viciously. "No, no—it would not be as safe. If they do not come in another hour, there will be time enough then for that. You must wait, Nicola. The police have always come before to Nicola Capriano, if they thought old Nicola could help them—and with a bomb—ha, ha—to whom else would they come—eh?—to whom—eh?"

He was instantly alert. Some one was outside there now. He heard the door bell ring, and presently he heard Teresa answer it. He caught a confused murmur of voices. The thin fingers were working with a quick jubilant motion over the other. The black eyes, half closed again, fixed expectantly on the door of the room opposite to the foot of the bed. It opened, and Teresa stepped into the room.

"It is Lieutenant Barjan, father," she said, in a low tone. "He wants to talk to you about that bomb explosion in the park."

"So!" A queer smile twitched at the old man's lips. He beckoned to his daughter to approach the bed, and, as she obeyed, he pulled her head down to his lips. "You know nothing, Teresa—nothing! Understand? Nothing except to corroborate anything that I may say. You did not even know that there had been an explosion until he spoke of it. You know nothing about Ignace. You understand?"

"Yes," she said composedly.

"Well, are those the clothes there that you and your police are using to blindfold your eyes with or are they not—eh? Are those Dave Henderson's clothes?"

his mind? Pardon me, Miss Capriano, if I—

A quick, heavy step sounded in the hallway. Nicola Capriano's alert and listening attitude was gone in a flash. He pushed himself up in the bed, and held himself there with one hand, and the other outflung, knotted into a fist, he shook violently in the direction of the door, as the figure of the plain-clothesman appeared on the threshold.

Old Nicola Capriano was apparently in the throes of a towering passion. "Get out of here!" he screamed. "Did my daughter not tell you to get out! Go away! I want nothing to do with you! Curse you—and all the rest of the police with you! Can you not leave old Nicola Capriano to die in peace—eh?"

"That's all right!" said Barjan coolly. He glanced over his shoulder. Teresa was standing just outside in the hall behind him. "Pardon me," he said again—and closed the door upon her. "Now then—there's no use kicking up all this dust. It won't get you anywhere, Nicola. There's a little matter that I want to talk to you about, and that I'm going to talk to you about whether you like it or not—that's all there is to it. And you'll get right to the point. What do you know about that affair in the park last night?"

NICOLA CAPRIANO sank back on his pillows, with a furious snarl. He still shook his fist at the officer. "What should I know about your miserable affairs!" he shouted. "I know nothing about any park! I know nothing at all! Why do you not leave me in peace—eh? For fifteen years this has gone on, always springing on Nicola Capriano, and for fifteen years Nicola Capriano has not lifted a finger against the law."

"That is true—as far as we know," said Barjan calmly. "But there's a little record that goes back beyond those fifteen years, Nicola, that keeps us a little chummy with you—and you've been valuable at times, Nicola."

"Bah!" Nicola Capriano spat the exclamation viciously at the other.

"About last night," suggested Barjan patiently. "It's rather in your line. I thought perhaps you might be able to give us a little help that would put us on the right track."

"I don't know what you're talking about!" snapped Nicola Capriano.

"I'm talking about the man that was blown to pieces by a bomb," Barjan was still patient.

Nicola Capriano's eyes showed the first gleam of interest.

"I didn't know there was any man blown up!" His tone appeared to mingle the rage and antagonism that he had first exhibited with a new and suddenly awakened curiosity. "I didn't know there was any man blown up," he repeated.

"That's too bad!" said Barjan with mock resignation—and settled himself deliberately in a chair at the bedside. "I guess, then, you're the only man in San Francisco who doesn't."

"You fool!" Nicola Capriano rasped in rage again. "I've been bed-ridden for three years—and I wish to God you had been, too!" He choked and coughed a little. He eyed Barjan malevolently. "I tell you this is the first I've heard of it. I don't hang about the street corners picking up the news! Don't sit there with your silly, smirking police face, trying to see how smart you can be! What information do you expect to get out of me like that? When I know nothing, I can tell nothing, can I? Who was the man?"

"That's what we want to know," said Barjan pleasantly. "And, look here, Nicola, I'm not here to rile you. All that was left was a few fragments of park bench, man, arc-light standard and a piece or two of what was evidently a bomb."

"What time was this?" Nicola Capriano's eyes were on the foot of the bed.

"Three o'clock this morning," Barjan answered.

"So you do know something about it, eh, Nicola?" he prodded softly.

"I didn't know anything had happened until you said so," returned Nicola Capriano curtly. "But seeing it has happened, maybe on—let me see"—Nicola Capriano's voice was tauntingly triumphant, as, with eyes half closed, visualizing for himself the attire of one Ignace Ferroni, he slowly enumerated the various articles of dress worn by the actual victim of the explosion. He looked at Barjan maliciously, as he finished. "Well," he demanded, "was there enough left of what the man had on to identify any of those things? If so—" Nicola Capriano shrugged his shoulders by way of finality.

"Yes, yes!" Barjan's excitement was almost beyond his control. "Yes, that is what he wore, but—good Lord, Capriano!—what does this mean? I don't understand!"

"About the clothes?" inquired Nicola Capriano caustically. "But I should know what he had on, since they were my clothes—eh? And you have only to look at the ones there on the bed to find out for yourself why I gave him some that, though I do not say they were new, for I have not bought any clothes in the three damnable and cursed years that I have lain here, were at least not all torn to pieces—eh?"

Barjan was pacing up and down the room now. When the other's back was turned, Nicola Capriano permitted a sinister and mocking smile to hover on his lips; when Barjan faced the bed Nicola Capriano eyed the officer with a sour contempt into which he injected a sort of viciously triumphant self-justification.

"Come across with the rest!" said Barjan abruptly. "How did Dave Henderson come here to you? And what about that bomb? Did you give it to him?"

Nicola Capriano's convenient irresponsibility was instantly at his command again. He scowled at Barjan, and his scrawny fist was flourished under Barjan's nose.

"No, I didn't!" he snarled. "And you know well enough that I didn't. You will try to make me out the guilty man now—eh—just because I was fool enough to help you out of your muddle!"

"You get out of here!" he screamed. "You get to hell out of here! I didn't ask you to come, and I don't give a damn whether it was Dave Henderson or a polecat! It's nothing to do with me! It's your hunt—so go and hunt somewhere else! I'm lying, or I'm off my nut, am I? Well, you get to hell out of here! Go on!" He shook a frantic fist at Barjan, and, choking, coughing, pulled himself up in bed again, and pointed to the door. "Do you hear? Get out!"

BARJAN shifted uneasily in alarm. Nicola Capriano's coughing spell had developed into a paroxysm that was genuine enough.

"Look here," said Barjan, in a pacifying tone, "don't excite yourself like that. I take back what I said. You gave me a jolt for a minute, that's all. But you've got the wrong dope somehow, Nicola. Whoever it was, it wasn't Dave Henderson. The man was too badly smashed up to be recognized, but there was at least some of his clothing left. Dave Henderson was followed all day yesterday by the police from the minute he left the penitentiary, and he didn't buy any clothes. Dave Henderson had on a black prison suit—and this man hadn't."

Nicola Capriano shrugged his shoulders in angry contempt.

"I'm satisfied, if you are!" he snarled. "Go on—get out!"

Barjan frowned a little helplessly now. "But I'm not satisfied," he admitted earnestly. "Look here, Nicola, for the love of Mike, keep your temper, and let's get to the bottom of this. For some reason you seem to think it was Dave Henderson. I know it wasn't; but I've got to know what started you off on that track. Those clothes—"

"You're a damn fool!" Nicola Capriano, apparently slightly mollified, was jerking now. "Those clothes—ha, ha! It is like the police! And so old Nicola is off his nut—eh? Well, I will show you!" He raised his voice and called his daughter. "Teresa, my little one," he said, as the door opened and she appeared, "bring me the clothes that young man had on last night."

"What's that you say?" exclaimed Barjan in sudden excitement.

"Wait!" said Nicola Capriano ungraciously.

Teresa was back in a moment with an armful of clothing, which, at her father's direction, she deposited on the foot of the bed.

Nicola Capriano waved her from the room. He looked at Barjan.

"Well, are those the clothes there that you and your police are using to blindfold your eyes with, or are they not—eh? Are those Dave Henderson's clothes?"

Barjan had already pounced upon the clothing, and was pawing it over feverishly. "Good God—yes!" he burst out sharply. "And the clothes that the dead man had

—let me see"—Nicola Capriano's voice was tauntingly triumphant, as, with eyes half closed, visualizing for himself the attire of one Ignace Ferroni, he slowly enumerated the various articles of dress worn by the actual victim of the explosion. He looked at Barjan maliciously, as he finished. "Well," he demanded, "was there enough left of what the man had on to identify any of those things? If so—" Nicola Capriano shrugged his shoulders by way of finality.

"Yes, yes!" Barjan's excitement was almost beyond his control. "Yes, that is what he wore, but—good Lord, Capriano!—what does this mean? I don't understand!"

"About the clothes?" inquired Nicola Capriano caustically. "But I should know what he had on, since they were my clothes—eh? And you have only to look at the ones there on the bed to find out for yourself why I gave him some that, though I do not say they were new, for I have not bought any clothes in the three damnable and cursed years that I have lain here, were at least not all torn to pieces—eh?"

Barjan was pacing up and down the room now. When the other's back was turned, Nicola Capriano permitted a sinister and mocking smile to hover on his lips; when Barjan faced the bed Nicola Capriano eyed the officer with a sour contempt into which he injected a sort of viciously triumphant self-justification.

"Come across with the rest!" said Barjan abruptly. "How did Dave Henderson come here to you? And what about that bomb? Did you give it to him?"

Nicola Capriano's convenient irresponsibility was instantly at his command again. He scowled at Barjan, and his scrawny fist was flourished under Barjan's nose.

"No, I didn't!" he snarled. "And you know well enough that I didn't. You will try to make me out the guilty man now—eh—just because I was fool enough to help you out of your muddle!"

BARJAN became diplomatic again.

"Nothing of the kind!" he said appealingly. "You're too touchy, Nicola! I know that you're on the square all right, and that you have been ever since your gang was broken up and Tony Lomazzi was caught. That's good enough, isn't it? Now, come on! Give me the dope about Dave Henderson."

Nicola Capriano's fingers plucked sulkily at the coverlet. A minute passed.

"Bah!" he grunted finally. "A little honesty—eh—when you want something from old Nicola! Well, then, listen! Dave Henderson came here last night in those torn clothes, and with his face badly cut from a fight that he said he had been in. I don't know whether his story is true or not—you can find that out for yourself. I don't know anything about him, but this is what he told me. He said that his cell in the prison was next to Tony Lomazzi's; that he and Tony were friends; that Tony died a little while ago; and that on the night Tony died he told this fellow Henderson to come to me if he needed any help."

"Yes!" Barjan's voice was eager. He dropped into the chair again, and leaned attentively over the bed toward Nicola Capriano. "So he came to you through Tony Lomazzi, eh? Well, so far, I guess the story's straight. I happen to know that Henderson's cell was next to Lomazzi's. But where did he get the bomb? He certainly didn't have it when he left the prison, and he was shadowed—"

"So you said before," interrupted Nicola Capriano caustically. "Well, in that case, you ought to know whether the rest of the story is true, too, or not. He said he met a stranger in a saloon last night, and that they chummed up together, and started in to make a night of it. They went from one saloon to another. Their spree ended in a fight at Vinetto's place up the block here, where Henderson and his friend were attacked by some of Baldy Vickers' gang, Henderson said his friend was knocked over, and that he himself had a narrow squeak of it, and just managed to escape through the back door, and ran down the lane, and got in here. I asked him how he knew where I lived, and he said that during the afternoon he had peated the house because he meant to come here last night anyway, only he was afraid the police might be watching him, and he had intended to wait until after dark."

Nicola Capriano's eyelids drooped to hide a sudden cunning and mocking gleam that was creeping into them. "You ought to be able to trace this friend of Henderson's if the man was knocked out and unconscious at Vinetto's, as Henderson claimed—and if Henderson was telling the truth, the other would corroborate it."

"We've already got him," said Barjan, with a flat of savagery in his voice. The "friend," alias a plain-clothesman, had proved anything but an inspiration from the standpoint of the police. "Go on! The story is still straight. You say that Dave Henderson said he intended to come here anyway, quite apart from making his escape from Vinetto's. What for?"

Nicola Capriano shrugged his shoulders. "Money, I dare say," he said tersely. "The usual thing! At least, I suppose that's what he had originally intended to come for but we didn't get as far as that. The fight at Vinetto's seemed to have left him with but one idea. When he got here he was in a devil's rage. The only thing that seemed to be in his mind was to get some clothes that wouldn't attract attention, instead of the torn ones he had on, and to get out again as soon as he could with the object of getting even with this gang of Baldy's. He said they were the ones that 'sent him up' on account of their evidence at his trial, and that they were after him again now because of the stolen money that he believed he had hidden somewhere. He was like a maniac. He said he'd see them and everybody else in hell before they got that money, and he swore he'd get every last one of that gang—and get them in a bunch."

"I didn't know what he meant then. I tried to quiet him down, but I might as well have talked to a wild beast. I tried to get him to stay here and go to bed—instead, he laughed at me in a queer sort of way, and said he'd wipe every one of that crowd off the face of the earth before morning. I began to think he was really crazy. He put on the clothes I gave him, and went out again."

BARJAN nodded.

"You don't know it," he said sulkily; "but that's where the police lost track of him—when he ran in here."

"I didn't even know the police were after him," said Nicola Capriano indifferently. "He came back here again about 2 o'clock this morning, and he had a small clockwork bomb with him. The fool!" Nicola Capriano chuckled suddenly. "He had found Baldy's gang all together down in Jake Morrissey's, and he had thrown the thing against the building. The fool! Of course, it wouldn't go off. He thought it would by hitting it against something. The only way to make it any good was to open the casing and set the clockwork. When he found it didn't explode, he picked it up again, and brought it back here. He wanted me to fix it for him. I asked him where he got it. All I could get out of him was that Tony Lomazzi had told him where he had hidden some things. Ha, ha!" Nicola Capriano chuckled more shrilly, still, and began to rock in bed with unseemly mirth. "One of Tony's old bombs! Tony left the young fool a legacy—a bomb, and maybe there was some money, too. I tried to find out about that, but all he said was to keep asking me to fix the bomb for him. I refused. I told him I was no longer in that business. That I went out of it when Tony Lomazzi died—fifteen years ago. He would listen to nothing. He cursed me. I did not think he could do any harm with the thing—and I guess he didn't. A young fool like that is best out of the way. He went away cursing me. I suppose he tried to fix it himself under that arc light on the park bench." Nicola Capriano shrugged his shoulders again. "I would not have cared to open that thing myself—it was made too long ago, eh? The clockwork might have played tricks even with me, who once was—"

"Yes," said Barjan. He stood up. "I guess that's good enough, and I guess that's the end of Dave Henderson—and one hundred thousand dollars." He frowned in a meditative sort of way. He went away cursing me, or not," he said slowly. "We'd have got him sooner or later, of course, but—"

He pointed abruptly to the prison clothes on the bed. "I'll take those," he announced briskly; "they'll need them at the inquest."

"There's some paper in the bottom drawer of that wardrobe over there," said Nicola Capriano unconcernedly. "You can wrap them up."

Barjan, with a nod of thanks, secured the paper, made a bundle of the clothes, and tucked them under his arm.

"WE WON'T forget this, Nicola," he said heartily, as he moved toward the door.

"Bah!" said Nicola Capriano, with a scowl. "I know how much that is worth!" He listened attentively as Teresa showed the plain-clothesman out through the front door. As the door closed again, he called his daughter.

"Listen, my little one," he said, and his forefinger was laid against the side of his nose in a gesture of humorous confidence. "I will tell you something. Ignace Ferroni, who was fool enough to blow himself up, has become the young man whom our good friend Tony Lomazzi sent to us last night."

"Father!" Her eyes widened in sudden amazement, not unminged with alarm. "You understand, my little one?" He wagged his head, and chuckled softly. "Not a word! You understand?"

"Yes," she said doubtfully.

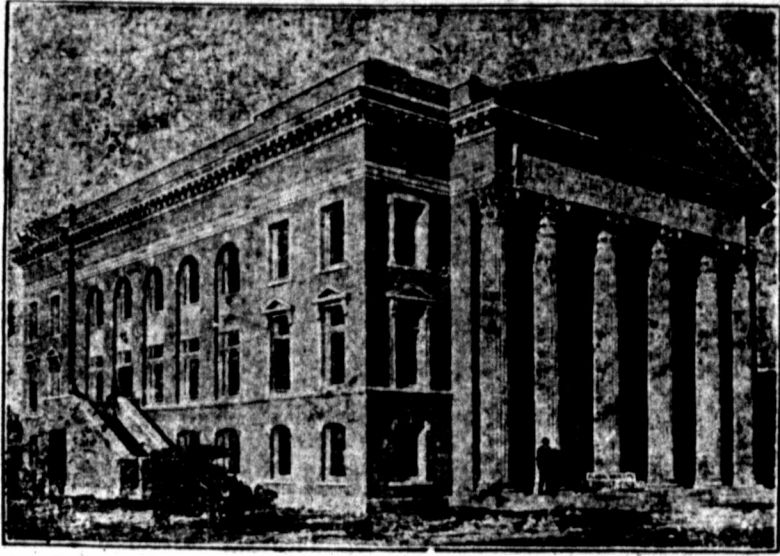

"Good!" grunted the old man. "I think Barjan has swallowed the hook. But I trust no one I must be sure—you understand—sure! Go and tell little Emmanuel, and tell him to find Little Peter, and send the scoundrel to me at once."

"Yes, father," she said, "but—"

"It is for Tony Lomazzi," he said. She went from the room.

HEART CULTURE

By RICHARD LLOYD JONES

MUSIC is the universal language. The truth of this lies in the fact that music is the language of the heart rather than of the intellect. The most valuable culture to civilization is heart culture. It governs, modifies, multiplies and interprets all else.

The most skilled and trained intellect loses its greatest potential possibilities if it be governed by a sensitive and cultivated heart.

Believe in the heart; listen to its pleadings and appeals; be not afraid to give sympathy which it dictates; or to modify your judgments by its sentiments.

However admirable is a brilliant logical mind, however enviable is the skilled or art-touched hand, something still more good and beautiful lies within the heart that has been trained to be true and generous.

There is no wealth in the world that is comparable with the wealth of affection and esteem. To be loved by many is the world's greatest reward for doing good.

He is loved most who loves most.

The thing to be desired is more heart — more heart in our work, more heart in our play, more heart in all our intercourses with the world around us. There never can be too much heart—the grievances and distress of this world are the products of our lack of it. The whole world was wrecked by a nation that dedicated its power to a hymn of hate.

Emerson used to say that the best thing a boy got out of college was a room and a fireplace to himself. Literally, that probably applied to the Harvard of his day; figuratively, even with our congested and steam-fitted dormitories it applies today. "The still small voice within" is a good teacher.

Man is made useful through what he can give rather than through what he can get. Men are measured by what they can do and by the means they have of expressing themselves. He who is unable to express himself in the terms of the heart falls short of the world's most coveted goal.

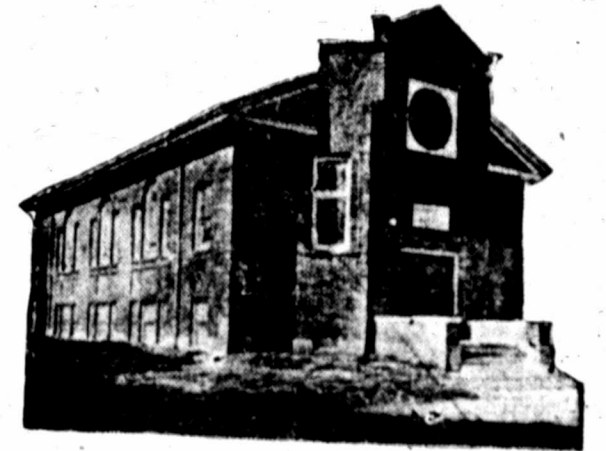

The man who is loved by children, whatever his sins of commercial greed may be, is a thousand times more favored in the eyes of the Lord, who said "Come Unto Me," than is his caustic critic of pretended virtues whose shallow character is revealed by the lack of love from little ones.

The tendency of this age, with its commercialized "get" instinct, is to harden rather than to mellow our hearts. We live in a commercial world and he loses life who so far yields to the purely money-making tendency of the times as to wholly forget the wealth that tenderness tenders.

Cultivate the muse of music, the thoughts of universal things. Cherish the all-inclusive instincts.

The need of these days is not greater opportunities for commerce and trade so much as a larger realization of the possibilities latent in the fellowship of mankind.

Men have lived with keener and more cultivated minds than Lincoln, but Lincoln lives in the minds of men as the master man because his mind was guided by a cultivated heart.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1921.

NOT GUILTY.

Scotland Yard detectives expose an unusual case of an innocent person being found guilty and sentenced to pay the penalty for a crime committed by another.

The case involved an English woman, Mrs. Rose Emma Gooding. Mrs. Gooding was arrested on the charge of sending criminally libelous letters to a neighbor.

The jury found her guilty. She had been in prison two months, awaiting trial, so the judge let her off with 10 days.

That was last December. In March, Mrs. Gooding again was arrested, charged with the same offense. Again she was convicted and sent to jail, this time for a year, the trial judge commenting that the previous light sentence evidently had not been appreciated.

But the libelous letters kept coming, though Mrs. Gooding was in a cell. Scotland Yard took the trail. The investigation caused the court of criminal appeal to release Mrs. Gooding, saying:

"This woman is perfectly innocent of the offenses of which she has been accused."

Yet she had had "a fair trial."

The Gooding case in England, and occasional similar cases nearer home, make you wonder if our system of taking evidence in criminal charges has a fatal flaw. Also, whether many innocents are railroaded to prison.

Justice sometimes makes mistakes. To err is human. The brain of man has not yet developed to the point where it can devise a mistake-proof system for justice or anything else. But—

Miscarriages of justice are in the minority. They are exceptions. For one thing, ours is a great improvement over the Napoleonic criminal code, still in operation in Quebec, by which the accused is assumed guilty until he proves his innocence.

It isn't many hundred years since trial was conducted by ordeal. The accused was supposed to be guilty unless he could pick up a handful of red-hot coals without burning the fingers. In place of testimony under oath, he had to plunge his arm into boiling water as proof of his sincerity.

Thieves were proclaimed guilty if they choked when trying to swallow dry barley bread and cheese in court. Justice then was based on witchcraft-superstition.

We have, at least, developed to the point where trials are conducted by processes of reasoning and fact. The emotional appeal in court is slowly dying out, though it clings tenaciously.

There's a long way to go before justice will be infallible. But if you get into court now, as an accused, you have 1,000 times the chances your ancestors had in the days of armor and witchcraft.

Worst obstacle to the attainment of absolute justice is human stupidity, manifested in many jurists. This is an element that will be difficult of solution.

SMILE A WHILE

YOU AND I

TRUUBLE. The door of a Boston police station opens and Mrs. William DeWolfe complains that her husband chased her out of the house with a carving knife.

"Friend husband," interviewed by the patrolman, said the trouble started when his wife poured his home brew down the sink.

It seems that the really important problems of life have nothing to do with the league of nations or the tariff.

GOLDIE. Meet Goldie, Missouri cow. She gives 8 1/2 pounds of milk and 2 1/2 pounds of butter fat a year. That nets her owner a profit of $387 annually, after paying for her feed.

Let Goldie is an old cow. And she always has been crippled. Age and handicaps don't necessarily prevent making a record.

SHATTERED. The real tragedy of the Fatty Arbuckle case is that another idol and king of kiddle-land has been shattered.

Children had put Arbuckle on a pedestal as a king of clean fun-making. Puzzles them how Fatty can be in jail.

Youth forms its ideals from youth's heroes. Ideals are shattered with the Black Sox left a hole in the heart of every American boy-lover of clean sport.

TRAGEDY. Marie Zumbach, raised in a Joliet basement prison where her mother had been for 17 years never saw a day-light or breathed fresh air. When humane officers found her she had the mind and body of a child of six.

Nothing can be done, says the best of medical science after months of labor. Dr. Sigmund Krumholz pronounces the case hopeless and says Marie must end her days in the condition she was found.

That shows the power and importance of good environment in youth. It is another indication that Germany rapidly is getting back on its feet.

GERMANY. Germany is the only important country where we are steadily increasing our export business. An instance: In the first seven months this year we shipped Germany $22,291 bales of cotton against $28,282 bales in corresponding months of 1920.

CURRENT COMMENT

The Consequences. (New York Times.)

If it be to the profit of the nations of the world that bickerings and quarrels continue three years after the ending of the war, with no ready means of settling them; that plans for putting a stop to the enormous expenditure for fleets and armies for which provision was made in the league covenant are impossible of execution because this attitude holds a road; and if it be a cause for pride and rejoicing that the government of peace-loving America is the one that has hobbled the league and hindered it from carrying out the great designs of its founders, then the group of republican senators, headed by Mr. Lodge, who caused the treaty and the covenant to be rejected at Washington, are worthy of the profound and continuing homage of America.

If, on the other hand, they did an evil thing, and we cannot well doubt that it is an evil thing to perpetuate the causes of war and inhibit the advance of peace, if it be an evil thing that, as Mr. James says in his Geneva dispatch to the Times, "thereas, three years ago America was the best nation on earth," it is today perhaps the most disliked, then these senators deserve from their fellowmen what it would not be excessive to say, but it would not be homage.

It is not pleasant, at least for millions of Americans, that a statesman of the standing and ability of Arthur J. Balfour should feel compelled to advise the league assembly that the hopes of those who made the peace with the Central powers have been heated of their fruition; that the burden of maintaining a preparedness for war "hangs like a millstone around the neck of the world," and hampers economic revival at every stage, and that these grievous disappointments are due to the absence from the league of important nations, meaning the United States. It is who have robbed the league of the authority it would have wielded had its membership included every civilized nation.

It is who have brought upon ourselves the reproaches of the other nations still, as Mr. James leaves at Geneva, "all the countries of the league are being told that America is killing the league because she wants her own league."

The responsibility, whether praise or blame, is ours. If there were a grain of truth in the campaign pretense that we have preserved our sovereignty, our independence, our Monroe doctrine by this sacrifice, we might not feel that the cost was too great. But all save the blindest of the blind see that that was a hollowness and sham.

When Germany was defeated, (Stephane Laumaine in the Outlook.) It was not in November, 1918, when the armistice was signed, that Germany was defeated. It was in April, 1917, when America declared war, meaning French military authority. To say she is head of the general staff of the French army, and in 1918 he was head of the French army, and in 1919 he was head of the French army, and in 1920 he was head of the French army, and in Erratic Fielding By Spudders Sends Them Down to Third Place

FORT WORTH, Sept. 16.—Aside from Danny Clark's hitting today there wasn't much happened at Panther park that would be of interest to Wichita fans. The Cats slipped an 8 to 6 defeat over them and showed today to third place while the Buffs were trounced by the Exporters. Bill Whittaker and Jack Hollingsworth were the opposing moundsmen and neither had much to brag about. The former was hit the harder of the two, but the latter evened matters up through his wildness.

The game was another one of those loose affairs that are the rule in Wichita Falls earlier in the week and neither club appeared to be bubbling with ambition. Danny Clark increased his batting average considerably by poling out a trio of safeties, one of which was a two-ply blow.

The Spudders drew five blood in the second chapter of their series by walking, went to second on a sacrifice, third on an infield out and home on Kitchens' single. Clark's pole put the visitors in the lead, but the Buffs scored second in the fourth. He poked a line drive to left for two sacks, took third on a sacrifice and counted on a pretty squeeze with the bases loaded.

The home athletes made life miserable for Hollingsworth in the same session, however. Sears drew a pass and when Tanner kicked stillbawls, granddaddy through the box that scored Sears. Phelan walked, filling the bag. Rigney shot a single past Gross that sign two over and the other two advanced on the relay to the next plate. They scored a moment later when Moore duplicated Rigney's hit.

The Spudders came back in their second chapter through the box that scored Kitchens drew a pass, Hollingsworth singled, Josephon doubled, the Panthers pulled a couple of bones, and Clark came through with another close knock kept hammering away and went back into the lead in the seventh. Josephon pried the lid off the session with a single and advanced Tanner's sacrifice. McEwee's hit put him on third and he counted when Clark drove out his third hit.

Once again the count was knotted when the Cats, in their portion of the frame, tallied on a pass, sacrifice and single by Kraft.

The game was won in the eighth when Skipper Atz juggled his hitters opportunely. Phelan doubled and went to third on Rigney's infield out. Moore was purposely passed, but Hollingsworth was sent in to bat for Whittaker and Taylor ran for Moore. Homer beat out a slow roller to Clark while Phelan scored. Coombs hit into what would have been a double billing, but Tanner threw poorly to Clark and Taylor scored. The score:

Pitcher Bob Clark

CLEVELAND, Sept. 17.—From the cellar with Columbus, in the American association, to Cleveland world champions, is the fortunate and unusual lot of one Bob Clark, pitcher.

It's the rare berries that a busher should be handed the sharpened knife for a possible cut into the world series cheese.

Cleveland secured Bob in a deal with Lowell, Mass., where he had started as a first baseman.

During a pinch the Lowell club one day needed a pitcher—and had none. The manager called on Clark to pitch.

All he had was speed—and nerve. He pitched, won and became known as the pitcher without a curve.

Cleveland farmed him out to the Columbus outfit last training season. He pitched the only no-hit game in the association, against Indianapolis. So far this season he has won 2 and lost 12.

When Pitcher Coveleskie was injured and Pitcher Caldwell suspended, Tris Speaker, in a hole for pitchers, sent out an S. O. S. for Clark.

Clark stands six feet six.

A TEXAS FAMILY'S EXPERIENCE

Galveston, Texas.—"After the flood in 1900, all my family became run-down, due to exposure of being in the water, loss of sleep, etc. They were all feeling miserable and the only medicine they took was Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. By the use of this they were all restored to health and strength.

CREAM OF GOLFERS

THE BIG TITLE EVENT

Travers and Byers Withdraw At Last Moment On Account of Illness

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 17.—Only about half as many golfers as last year took off today in the eighteen hole elimination round of the national amateur championship at the St. Louis Country club, but the players had been limited to handicap five men for the most part, and the 144 starters comprised the cream of the United States, besides Willie Hunter, champion of Great Britain, and Raymond Swift, another Briton, two Canadians and two Scotch. Among those contesting the title were four former winners and the present champion, Chick Evans, who did not reach the links until today just before he had one of his usual colds.

The former champions among the original entrants, Jerome Travers and E. M. Byers, withdrew, the latter because of illness. But Chandler Egan, Portland, Francis Ouimet, Boston, Davidson Herron, Chicago, and promoter, received today a radio message from Manager Descamps in which the latter stated that Carpenter would be ready and fit by that time to defend the title he won from Battling Levinsky.

Memphis Club Hangs Up New Record For Victories In Season

ATLANTA, GA., Sept. 17.—The 1921 season of the Southern association that closes today with Memphis as pennant winner after a runaway race proved record-breaker for games won by the championship team for total home runs and for individual circuit slugs.

The Memphis club with 103 victories has already hung up a new record for wins, regardless of today's game, according to records here which show no other Southern association team having passed the century mark in games won. The total homers were 217, and Bensen, Birmingham first baseman, has closed 22 homers, which sets the mark set last year by Miller of Little Rock. In addition to this, Stewart, Birmingham second baseman, is credited with 23 stolen bases, the second record in the league. Jimmy Johnston holds the record with 55 made several years ago.

Six of the clubs played in and out ball, winning streaks being regularly followed by a series of losses. With Memphis as champion, the other teams lead to three and a half games in the National league yesterday. Shocker, now with the St. Louis Americans, pitched against his old team mates and won, 10 to 2.

FORMER YANKEE FIRST CLUB OUT OF FIRST PLACE

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—A former member of the New York Americans—Pitcher Urban Shocker—helped to pull that team from first place in the National league yesterday. Shocker, now with the St. Louis Americans, pitched against his old team mates and won, 10 to 2.

While this was happening at the Polo Grounds, the Cleveland world's champions continued their winning streak, defeating Washington, and today were leading the American league two points ahead of the New Yorkers.

The New York Giants increased their lead to three and a half games in the National league by winning the first game of a series of three from the Pittsburgh Pirates, their nearest rivals. It was the Giants' ninth straight victory and also the ninth straight over Pittsburgh.

ROUND-UP TO FEATURE SECOND DAY'S PROGRAM CHILDRESS STATE FAIR

CHILDRESS, TEXAS, Sept. 17.—Chuck wagon, whooping cowboys, and a grand old time will be the features of the round-up on the second day of the Childress state fair, Sept. 17.

J. J. Jefferies, superintendent of entertainment, has just received a car of Mexico steers that are all the same implies, long horns, snaky and agile bodies and legs, and a look in their eyes. He bought these outright for the big round-up and they will furnish good entertainment for the grand stands as well as the participants.

A cutting contest will feature the big round-up, and Crews Bros. of Childress have furnished the calves for the calf branding. A purse of $25 will be offered in the cutting contest, and a large one will be distributed for the calf branding, after roping, riding and other amusements.

The steers that will be used in the round-up are just like those that were roped in this section of the country before Childress country was organized.

Thousands of visitors will witness this big round-up, and old timers from all over the country have already signified their intention of attending the show.

THOUSANDS GATHER FOR FEATHERWEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP BOUT

CLEVELAND, Sept. 17.—Will Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, he able to stave off the youthful Danny Frush, or will he emulate the performance of James J. Jeffries, Jess Willard and other champions who let themselves be fooled into believing they were as good after long layoffs as when they won the titles?

This was the main topic of discussion as thousands of fight fans from all over the country gathered here for the twelve-round titanic contest at Dunn field this afternoon. Opinion was divided. Many sportsmen fear Kilbane's hands will go back on him and much doubt was expressed concerning his wind. It will be Kilbane's first championship bout in five years.

Kilbane is confident he will retain the championship. He declared he is in better condition than he has been for several years.

Frush and his manager, Sam Harris, were just as confident that the championship would change hands.

Frush was within the 125 pounds he agreed to make for the fight. Although Kilbane is to come in at catch weight, he is expected to weigh about 127 pounds. The betting ranged from 15 to 2 in favor of Kilbane to even money.
