

HOUSE WARMING OF NORTH SIDE CENTER IS HAPPY OCCASION

COMMUNITY HOUSE EFFICIENTLY DEDICATED ON FRIDAY EVENING.

TO PLAN TODAY FOR RELIGIOUS SERVICES

Building to Be Used As Neighborhood Church—Speeches and Music.

A mass meeting of the citizens of the North Side has been called for 7:30 o'clock this afternoon in the recently completed community house, when plans will be discussed for religious services on the Sabbath for the community in the new building.

The mass meeting was announced at the big housewarming given at the community house Friday evening, when several hundred citizens of the North side were assisted in a general celebration of the completion of the house by twenty-five or thirty of their friends from this side of the river.

The mayor commended the splendid spirit of cooperation displayed by the North side citizens in their work for the community house, and spoke with appreciation of the class of citizenship which such a spirit builds up.

Mrs. Gullatt's report was a summary of the work of the North Side League members and their husbands in bringing their dream of a community gathering place to realization, and of the individuals and companies who, by substantial donations, had made the building possible.

Other numbers on the program included songs by Misses Glenore and Josephine Fisk and a "quartet" number by a group of gentlemen who seemed to anticipate difficulty in achieving the requisite volume of sound and picked up two additional members as they came down front.

Following the community sing refreshments of coffee, sandwiches and cake were served, and the cake auction "came off" with between $30 and $40 realized from the auction of two cakes by R. F. Johnson and R. E. Shepherd.

IRISH HOPES TO RESUME CAMPAIGN WITHIN SHORT TIME

By virtue of having won the second semester series of debates, William Powers and Chilton Haynes will compete with Joe Baahara and Mortimer Clifton in a debate March 21, the winning team to represent the Wichita Falls high school boys in the interscholastic meet to be held at Iowa Park in April. Stella Winters and Francis Jones will represent the girls in the same meet.

RED MAN THANKS FRIENDS FOR MESSAGES

He Resumes His Intention of Resuming Stumping Tour Soon As Possible.

Condition of Congressman W. Parrish, injured Wednesday when the automobile in which he was being driven to a speaking engagement at Rocky dropped into a ditch, continued to improve Saturday. His physicians warned him not to expect a speedy recovery. They said it would be several days before he would be able to speak in his senatorial campaign.

Although suffering much pain, Mr. Parrish Saturday issued a statement acknowledging the messages of sympathy and announcing his intention of continuing his speaking campaign with great vigor as soon as he was able to do so.

His statement is a grateful acknowledgment of the sincere expressions of sympathy received from his friends over the state and abroad, and individual acknowledgments will be made as early as possible.

He said that my injuries, while painful and distressing, should keep me out of the campaign but a short time. I am profoundly thankful to my friends who have assured me since the accident that the campaign in which I shall have special attention, is assured to know that under any circumstances my friends and supporters will redouble their efforts.

Official business may take me to Washington for a few days as soon as I am able to travel, but I now expect to be able to renew intensive campaign in a few days.

LATE BANKS CAN'T COLLECT PREMIUMS

Commissioner Holds Agreement Against Texas Insurance Laws.

AUSTIN, March 18.—A plan of agreement between bank and insurance agent or company for policy holders to deposit the money pay premiums in the bank, is a violation of the state insurance laws, Deputy Insurance Commissioner John M. Scott today advised Austin insurance agency.

The policy holder has no control over this money after it is deposited in the bank, Mr. Scott said in part. "The bank acting as agent in paying his insurance premium, likewise as the agent of insurance company in receiving and transmitting this money for premium, or paying the premium on his policy of insurance in the bank. This bank is not a bank from day to day to premium and is functioning as the agent of the insurance company, most anxiously coming under the definition of 'agency,' as defined in the insurance laws."

Commissioner Scott said that if it is found that a bank holds a policy to be a violation of the laws of the insurance department "it is not to the plan because it is sound, as it endeavors to recognize the divergent fields of insurance and banking, between which there is no structural affinity."

Life of Principal in Love Triangle Asks For Divorce

ENVER, COL., March 18.—So that husband's soul mate and two she might exchange the stigma of infamy for a name and respectability, Mrs. Grace Jarret Stoffel, 41 wife of George Jarret Stoffel, proprietor of a local garage, obtained in city court today a preliminary decree of divorce.

When her final decree is granted months from now, Mrs. Stoffel and her husband will be free to live "the other woman," and there will be able to gain a name for the man and the two children she has had with Stoffel in the last four years.

Mrs. Stoffel will step completely out of the triangle which has disturbed the harmony of her household for several years.

Her domestic affairs of the Stoffels aired in juvenile court in August, 1919, when Miss Nellie Phillips, 25, complained to the court that Mrs. Stoffel was seeking to gain possession of the two children which she had with Mrs. Stoffel's husband, Miss Phillips, who admitted she had been soul-mate of the garage man for years, charged that Mrs. Stoffel, a middle-aged woman, was seeking to deprive her of her "own flesh and bone."

Gentle court officials investigating Stoffel had been living with his wife and also for four years had maintained a second establishment in this city for Miss Phillips and his two children. Stoffel, who was 38, divided time, both women admitted, between them.

At that time Stoffel was ordered by the court to pay $20 a month for support of his children by Miss Phillips.

Today Mrs. Stoffel told the court she had found Miss Phillips had her place in her apartment and lived there alone. She told the court her husband said he would give her the other woman as soon as he was free.

FINALS IN DEBATE AT HIGH SCHOOL TO BE HELD MARCH 31

By virtue of having won the second semester series of debates, William Powers and Chilton Haynes will compete with Joe Baahara and Mortimer Clifton in a debate March 21, the winning team to represent the Wichita Falls high school boys in the interscholastic meet to be held at Iowa Park in April. Stella Winters and Francis Jones will represent the girls in the same meet.

Baahara and Clifton won the first semester contests and Haynes and Powers, in winning the second semester events, came out first in a field of five contesting teams. The others were composed of Herbert Mayfield and Preston Beck, John Sides and Sam Heldreth, Gage McDermott and Peyton Thurman, Gordon Kenley and Ridley Maples.

Last Friday night Haynes and Powers were returned winners in a dual debate with the Altus, Okla., high school team in the latter city, while at the same time Moses Jones and Winters won out over the Altus girls in a debate the local school building.

FLORAL CHURCH TO HAVE BUSY PROGRAM IN REVIVAL TODAY

"The special services at the Floral Heights M. E. church will be of unusual interest today," says an announcement. "Not only will Bishop E. D. Moulton preach this morning, but all lovers of music will have an especial treat. Harvey Hindermeyer, one of the Edison artists, who happens to be passing through the city, has consented to sing at the 11 o'clock service. He will sing 'The Living God.' He is in Texas giving concerts for the Edison people. This congregation is fortunate in having him today. The offertory will be a violin solo by Jarrell Gose."

A large number of people will be presented to the bishop this morning for the right hand of fellowship in the church. Dr. Grosselose conceived the idea of presenting the bishop with 50 new members on the first Sunday of the meeting and accordingly organized what he called the "Bishop's Fifty Club." These persons, 50 in number, will be received into the church this morning.

"At 4 p. m. Dr. Grosselose will hold a service for the young people. There will be a rousing song service at that hour and public is invited. At the evening service the bishop will preach again, and in addition to the usual song service there will be a mixed quartet of instruments under the direction of Miss Goff. Mr. Richardson and Mrs. Adams will sing a duet, and by request Mrs. Nichols will play an offertory 'Meditation,' by Sturges."

STRONG NORTHER HITS FORGAN AND HEADED THIS WAY

A strong norther that sent the thermometer to points below freezing struck Forgan, Okla., at 9 o'clock Saturday night, according to a report received by the chief dispatcher of the Wichita Falls & Northwestern from the agent at that point. Saturday afternoon a strong wind from the west showered Wichita Falls and vicinity with a sand storm of no mean proportion. Shortly after sundown the wind direction changed to the north but grew calm.

Temperatures dropped all along the railroad lines north and west of the city after sundown Saturday and practically each agent reported a change in wind direction from west to north. The Forgan operator reported clear skies.

WATER SITUATION SLIGHTLY IMPROVED IN OIL DISTRICTS

RAINS BRING SOME RELIEF BUT FAR FROM ENOUGH FOR OPERATORS.

SEVERAL COMPLETIONS IN ELECTRA DISTRICT

Shallow Pool Gets Slight Extension—Young County Reports Some Good Wells.

Some improvement in the water situation in the North Texas oil fields resulted from the rain of early last week, but the improvement is not generally helpful.

Several completions in Young county, including the one at the Curry pool, have been reported.

Several completions in Young county, including the one at the Curry pool, have been reported. The Curry pool is located in the northwestern part of the county.

In the territory close to South Bend a great amount of activity is being shown on nearly every lease, especially around the Scott land.

The Roxana-Garrett No. 2 and the North American No. 3, E. F. Scott just south of town, offset to the North American's well on the Scott, were completed last week in the 2200 foot sand, making 300 and 400 barrels.

Operations in Young county are uninterrupted progressing with many new operators becoming interested in this territory owing to the fact that several producing sands have been found from 1800 to 2800 feet.

Stevens county enjoyed good rains, worth many thousands of dollars, and was the means of relieving the water situation in all sections of the county.

The Texas and Pacific company has made a location on the Lake Wilson ranch in section 22 east of Geraldine townsite and will start a test some time during the coming month.

SIX-SEVENTHS OF A MILE OF ROAD PAVED THIS WEEK

Six-sevenths of a mile, approximately 4,500 feet of concrete was laid during the past week on the Burk Burnett road by the two mixers of Potts and Prentice, contractors.

A number of tests in Archer county are still waiting on water and very little work is being done. The Texhoma Refining company, has set and cemented casing on top of the sand at 1,600 feet in their No. 15 on the S. M. Goss tract and will drill in shortly.

SPRING CLEAN-UP URGED THIS WEEK THROUGHOUT CITY

RESIDENTS URGED TO GUARD AGAINST WARM WEATHER DANGER.

CHANCE TO EMPLOY THOSE NEEDING WORK

Health Department Urges That Work Be Completed by Next Saturday.

Announcement that a spring "clean up week" would start today is contained in a communication from Dr. A. H. Douglas, head of the city health department.

It follows: The week starting March 20 is declared "spring clean up week" and all citizens are urged to have the cleaning of their premises completed by March 26. This means that all trash, rubbish and garbage shall have been removed, either by burning or hauling off, and proper receptacles provided for future use as trash and garbage containers.

The best way to enjoy freedom from flies next summer is to prevent the breeding of flies now in every possible way. Don't allow trash to accumulate, keep stable manure in fly tight boxes and keep garbage in covered metal cans.

The city will not be able to furnish free collection service for this "clean up," but a phone call to the health department—5015—will bring you licensed parties who will be glad to serve you for a very nominal fee.

Also, this is the time when derelict war veterans are registering for all kinds of employment and you can get your yard cleaning work done cheaply and at the same time help in a good cause.

Inspections covering the entire city will be conducted by the sanitary committee of the civic league in co-operation with the city health department following clean up week and complaints filed against those parties maintaining insanitary nuisances.

The interest and pride which so many have already shown is highly commendable and it is the hope that this city may enjoy a regular clean up epidemic that will touch every household.

MAYOR CLINE TO SPEAK AT A. M. E. CHURCH SUNDAY P. M.

White folks are especially invited to attend special services at the new African Methodist church, at 212 Park street, in an announcement from a special committee. The special service will be held at 3:00 o'clock Sunday afternoon and a feature will be an address by Mayor W. D. Cline, who has consented to speak. R. E. Shepherd will sing. A special song service by jubilee singers will also feature the service.

D. S. PRUITT, ONCE MERCHANT HERE, IS VICTIM OF ACCIDENT

O. S. Pruitt, an early day merchant in Wichita Falls and well known to the old-timers here, died at his home at Lawton, Okla., last week and was buried there Thursday.

Mr. Pruitt was 75 years of age at his death, which resulted from injuries received when he fell on the postoffice steps at Lawton several months ago, breaking his hip. He came to Wichita Falls and engaged in the grocery business in 1882. For a number of years he continued in the grocery business on Ohio avenue, next door to the old City National bank building at the corner of Seventh and Ohio. He left Wichita Falls about 16 years ago, going to Lawton, where he resided up to the time of his death.

He was a brother-in-law of John Moore, well known farmer living north of Wichita Falls, and an uncle of Mrs. Harry Daugherty and Mrs. James L. Sides of this city. Mrs. Daugherty went to Lawton to see him after the accident in which his hip was broken. She returned by way of Grandfield and in making the transfer there she also met with an accident in which her hip was fractured.

ALLEGED FORGER IS ARRESTED AND PLACED IN JAIL

Ira Glasgow, who was arrested by city officers Saturday afternoon, was placed in the county jail after charges of forgery were placed against him. He made a statement according to his story told the officers, he went to a store, asking whether they would cash a check for $25.00, as he wanted to purchase some merchandise. After the merchandise had been bargained for he presented a check signed by Al Plack.

The manager, said that as a matter of business he would call on Mr. Plack. Glasgow, it is said, told him that was not necessary as Plack was standing outside on the walk.

When Glasgow got out of the door it is said that he tore up the check. A city officer immediately placed him under arrest.

Harry Hindermeyer, tenor, and the Mann Sisters trio, a quartette of Edison artists, will be presented Tuesday evening at the Wichita theater by the Phonograph Shop, and a general invitation has been extended all lovers of music in the city.

Mr. Hindermeyer will include in his program several southern songs which he is said to interpret in an artistically and pleasingly. He will also perform the seemingly impossible feat of singing a duet with himself, it is stated. The Mann sisters form a trio of musical talent which has made them favorites with the music-loving public. The entertainment will begin at 8:15.

Approximately one-third of the federal employes throughout the United States are women.

DEFENDANTS GIVEN VERDICT IN CASE ON TRIAL 8 DAYS

The defendants in the case of M. E. Stevens, trustee, against George W. Dawley, R. W. Talbot and E. D. Davenport were given a verdict by the jury in the 29th district court Saturday afternoon. The case has been on trial for eight days, commencing Friday morning, March 19.

The case was submitted to the jury on special issues and the jury found for the defendants in each of the issues.

The plaintiff asked for a judgment of $100,000, alleging that this amount was retained by the defendants, whom he charged with conspiracy, as commissions, when in fact it was part of the consideration of the sale of some oil property in the northwest fields.

CHILDREN TO REPEAT PRETTY PLAY AT PALACE THEATER

The pupils of Mrs. Burzle's class who presented the pretty playlet, "When Betty Ross Made Old Glory" to an audience comprised of their immediate families and friends last Saturday night, have been persuaded to repeat the clever sketch Saturday evening at the Palace theater, and a general invitation has been extended to the public.

The playlet is said to have been unusually well done, with attractive costumes and many original bits worked out by the participants themselves.

NEGROES RAISE FUNDS TO BEAUTIFY GROUNDS, FORM NEW ORGANIZATION

The Parent-Teacher association of the Booker T. Washington (negro) school is working hard to raise the money to pay their quota of the tree-planting expenses for the school campus. At a recent meeting of the association the beautification committee chairman reported $125.00 turned over to W. W. Brown, with $50 yet to be raised.

Donations were voted to the Boys Athletic association of the school and to the beautification committee during the meeting, and a payment of $15 was reported made on the set of Stoddard lectures. The members of the association urge all parents and friends of the school pupils to attend the April 7 meeting and help with the work.

Citizens Civic League. The colored citizens of the New Kemp addition recently met in St. Matthews Baptist church and perfected a Citizens' Civic league for the addition. The first effort of the organization will be to secure adequate water connection, with civic improvement a first aim. J. Donaldson was elected president of the league, J. Register, secretary; A. J. King, treasurer. The next meeting is to be held March 22, at the church, and all citizens are invited.

BISHOP MOUZON WILL BE PRINCIPAL SPEAKER AT KIWANIS LUNCHEON MONDAY

Bishop E. D. Mouzon, prominent churchman who is conducting a series of special services in the Floral Heights church, will be the principal speaker at the Kiwanis club luncheon Monday noon. Bishop Mouzon is himself a Kiwanian and has established himself in this city, as elsewhere, as a speaker of exceptional brilliance and ability.

That he will have a worth while message for the club members is a foregone conclusion. An added feature of the meeting will be musical entertainment by a ladies' quartet composed of Misses Glenore and Josephine Fisk, Julia and Reulah Ross and Betty Zinkobrocker. This same group appeared before the Kiwanis club several weeks ago and the instrumental and vocal music furnished on that occasion made such a decided hit that the performers were immediately prevailed upon to return.

Joe Kahl will give the attendance prize, while the silent boost will be furnished by C. W. Reid.

OKLAHOMA CITY PROVES EASY FOR SALM'S SLUGGING SPUDDERS

TANNER SETS PACE WITH A CLUB AS SPUDDERS BEAT WESTERN LEAGUERS 10-5

By PAUL W. LARKIN.

If there's one thing the Spudders like better than Indians it's more Indians. With two Cleveland scammers already tucked under their belts, Skipper Salm's slugger proceeded to tear into the Redskins from the Western league yesterday afternoon at Athletic park after spotting them three batters in the opening inning which wound up in the desirable end of a 10 to 5 score. It was a featureless contest from an Oklahoma City standpoint and were it not for the terrific hitting of Buddy Tanner and the airtight fielding of Eddie Wright, there would not have been much to commend from a local standpoint.

STAY IN THERE, BUDDY.

HART PICTURE TO FEATURE EMPRESS BILL THREE DAYS

Wm. S. Hart's latest Paramount release, "Travelin' On," will be the feature of the week at the Olympia theatre when it appears here for the final three days of this week.

The story, which was written by Hart himself, has Arizona as its locale, with the star appearing in the role of a picturesque plainsman who, after a long and arduous "travelin' on," was all he did, and he knew no law, but had a big gun. Finally, however, he lands in Tumlege bluff and after some highly active fight, locates permanently.

SIX WELL KNOWN STARS ON GEM THEATER PICTURE BILL

Catherine Calvert, Priscilla Dean, William Fairbanks, Tom Mix, Robert McKim and Franklin Farnum are scheduled to appear in the order named at the Gem theatre this week. All six will be seen in recent releases of their best photoplay productions.

"The Heart of Maryland," featuring Miss Calvert, will feature the Monday bill, while Priscilla Dean and Lon Chaney in "Outside the Law," one of their greatest successes, come for a one-day stand Tuesday. "The Virginian," which has been rated as one of the best pictures ever made by the Albee-H. Smith company.

Wednesday brings two attractions, the Fairbanks film, "Western Pep," and a Fox news reel in which is shown the breaking ground for the main dam of the Wichita Falls Irrigation project late last February.

Tom Mix comes Thursday in "Trailing," and Friday brings Robert McKim and a big supporting cast in an Oriental play, "The Lure of Egypt." The Mix picture is a screen adaptation of a novel by Max Brand. Eva Novak plays opposite the star.

"So This is Arizona," with Franklin Farnum as the interrogator, closes the week Saturday.

"ZIZ-ZAG" REVUE, MUSICAL COMEDY AND VAUDEVILLE CONTINUES AT MAJESTIC

Another week of musical comedy and vaudeville by the Jack Hutchinson "Ziz Zag" revue will be the Majestic theatre's offering. Hutchinson and his troupe have been at the Majestic for the past seven days.

According to present plans, a new series of musical plays as well as some new vaudeville acts will be staged by the company during the coming week. Those presented last week made a big hit with the crowded houses and efforts will be made to repeat the success.

OLYMPIC OFFERS BETTY COMPSON AND INGRAM FILM

"The Conquering Power" and "The Woman in the Case" here—this week.

"The Conquering Power," a new Rex Ingram production for Metro, and "The Woman in the Case," a Betty Compson feature, will be the two film offerings at the Olympic theatre this week, the first named coming Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and the latter appearing the last three days.

In producing "The Conquering Power" Mr. Ingram had the assistance of practically all the stars appearing in the famous "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Rudolph Valentino, Alice Terry and Ralph Lewis being numbered among the actors.

The film is an adaptation by June Mathis of Balzac's novel, "Eugenie Grandet." The scene is laid in a provincial city where the miserly Grandet hoards his gold and lives in poverty with his daughter, Eugenie. A nephew, Charles, a young boulevardier from Paris, son of a bankrupt suicide, is thrown on the miser's charity—and is accordingly thrown out. He ships to Martinique with little money but with the memory of Eugenie's love.

This is the beginning of Balzac's great story of romance and greed, from the start on the action grows more spirited with each moment and the climax comes as a crashing surprise.

In "The Woman in the Case" Betty Compson is given another opportunity to display her versatile screen abilities and she makes the most of it. The story has been adapted from a Clyde Fitch novel. Will Careton appears as leading man and Cleo Ridgely returns to the screen for the first time in several years as a vamp.

MIXED UP RELATIONSHIP DEVELOPED BY MARRIAGE

LINCOLN, Neb., March 18.—Pigeon out your eyes—Mrs. F. R. Hawley, juvenile probation officer, has a headache as a result of trying to, she says.

Lewis Biggs, 18, a newlywed, is his own stepbrother-in-law—and Zelma Starr Biggs, who he married in Beatrice, Neb., January 23, is his sister-in-law to herself.

May Biggs and Pete Starr were married at the same time. Brother and sister married brother and sister.

The Biggs mother, divorced, is the wife of John Starr, father of Pete and Zelma.

The relation came to light today while Mrs. Hawley was looking into the reputed marriage of Zelma's sister, Sarah, 16, to Herman Roush at Nebraska City last week.

The young Biggs were before district Judge Morning at an informal hearing at which the court decided to take steps to annul the marriage, declaring that Zelma was but 12 years old. Judge Morning condemned the marriage as a "piece of folly."

COLLECTIONS FOR JANUARY TOTALED NEARLY $900,000

County Tax Collector M. E. Tittle, who, together with his deputies, have finally succeeded in wading through the avalanche of work that piled up during the busy month of January, reported Saturday that his monthly report just completed showed that nearly $900,000 in money was received by his office during the first month of the year.

This is considered an enormous amount for one month's collections, but as usual the majority of the tax payers waited until the last month to pay the 1921 taxes.

The county treasurer will receive a check of $487,454.39, while the state treasurer will receive $223,441.13. School tax collections amounted to $197,995.38. Automobile license tax totaled $74,577.50.

During January a total of $336,000 in poll taxes were received and 290 exemption issued.

WHEN LEE CLARK WAS AN EXPERT WITH THE BRANDING IRON IN HIS COWBOY DAYS

It was only when John Lomax brought an echo of the old "C-w-boy's Lament" to the students at the high school during his recent visit here that hints of the prominent Lee Clark's past glories began to leak out.

Caught up by the words: "Oh, bury me not on the lone prairie. Where the wild coyote will howl o'er me." Mr. Clark, for years a prominent figure in state educational circles, was cornered and forced to so far break the shell of his modesty as to admit himself a one-time champion welder of the branding iron as well as a first-class man at the roundup.

It was on the famous "XIT" ranch in northwest Texas, some twenty years ago, after Mr. Clark had been a student and teacher for years. For so many years, indeed, that his health demanded a letup on the mental strain, so the instructor of Latin in the high school at Temple took his wife and two little girls and sought the outdoor life and "hard" work of Texas' largest ranch, "Texas history" enthusiasts.

Texas history enthusiasts, some of them know all about that XIT ranch and the "crazed" of the past—many years. Back in the eighties Texas traded the 3,000,000 acres that made up the ranch to J. V. Farwell and brother, business men of Chicago, for the building of the state capitol at Austin, Texas. In addition to furnishing the granite, the ranch involved a strip of land 250 miles long and about 45 miles wide, extending from Channing, where the main headquarters of the ranch were, to the lower plains to the south. Recently Texas recovered 60,000 acres of the original ranch through the courts, it having been proven that Farwell Brothers were overpaid for their work to that amount.

Mr. Clark was on the ranch before its sale and breaking up into smaller divisions, and he believes the deal was one of the most fortunate ever made. The Texas Pre-hold Land and Investment Company, as the ranch owners styled themselves, introduced the old cowmen of Texas, Mr. Clark says. They helped also to encourage the raising of fine, thoroughbred stock, and to introduce the scrub and longhorns of the old days, and they illustrated the practical side of ranching on a gigantic scale by means of a card index system, according to the estimate of "the best iron man the XIT ever knew." Coming into a country where hards were fences were unknown, miles away from the railroad, where the most careless of ranching methods was the rule, the XIT owners developed one of the greatest as well as one of the biggest of Texas stock industries.

The son of Randolph Clark, one of the founders of Texas Christian University, a preacher and teacher, but a ranch owner and fine stock raiser as well, Mr. Clark, when in college in Fort Worth at the same time he was helping in the management of his father's ranch, which included in those days a part of the ground now covered by the tracks about the union depot. Fort Worth was a village and the railroad was 40 miles away. Randolph Clark, a native Texan, and pioneer in educational and religious progress, had also a far-seeing eye for material development, and was one of the first Texas ranchmen to stock his pastures with thoroughbred stock to the exclusion of the old scrub stock.

On this ranch of his father's, the present superintendent of local city schools received the training that made it possible for him to take his place among the cowboys of the famous ranch, and to recover his health after he was 20 years old and forced to pause in his educational work for a real "fever" they called him. He never knew how they found out about his "past." But they were friendly about it, he says.

"I guess they were surprised to see that I knew a little about that sort of work. Then, too, they had a presumption, and I was careful not to boast of any superior education. The boss wanted men who did what they were told. If I was successful on the ranch it was because I did just that.

Mr. Clark, or "fever," worked under Ira Aien, a famous ex-ranger. Later sent to Fort Worth because of the disturbance, and unconsciously made sheriff without residence in the county or any of the customary formalities.

"It wasn't what you could do; it was what eight horses could do," is the way Mr. Clark describes the work in which the great pleasure and from which he derived much benefit. "We had seven horses for the day and one for night watch. The wagon men roped our horses for us every morning about four. The horses were driven in between three sides of stretch-rope and the wagon and were all ways roped, no matter how gentle they were. I used always to hear about four each morning the "fever." They were splendid horses, capable of much hard riding, some of the finest fine horses used in the state. There was one had one, though, called Milk Shake. When he got through pitching he wasn't worth anything else. The boss used him as an instrument of punishment. There was a cowboy, Terra Blanca John, they called him, who talked too much. By way of discipline the boss would suggest, Terra Blanca, better ride Milk Shake this morning."

"They were all the old original cowboys, of course. Some of them outlived their time and were out of place in the new age of ranching that was already coming in when I was with them. Even big ranches were beginning to raise a little food then, and some of the cowboys were unable to adapt themselves.

"There was Billy. He was little, bow-legged, with small feet. Hadn't walked enough to develop his feet. He was never off his horse or away from his rope. When hay cutting time came Billy would disappear. He would always be found later, but on some little ranch, breaking wires. Anything that hinted of the farm was abhorrent to him. He just ducked."

"Wolves, antelope and mustangs were all a part of the day's experience to the boys on the XIT. There was a wolf, paid by the government and by the ranch owners, who made $15 a wolf, besides his fur, at every kill. Once the wolf brought his wife and daughter to watch the boys at the branding. Many of them had been away from town and women for months, so that the spectators caused much excitement. There was the record branding we done, the score reaching 100 calves in 101 minutes."

"Just next to the backbone, near the root of the tail, not too high" was the order of the boss to the iron man with the brand of the Lazy X, the simplified mark of the ranch.

In the public schools as teacher, in official state positions, in the normal college at Canyon, as head of the local public schools and a leader in many phases of educational and religious development in Texas, Mr. Clark has retained his love for the ranch life, declaring the cowboys to be his best friends. He has watched the development of Texas ranching from the days of scrub cattle and brush fences, has managed a small ranch, known the long trails and worked with other cowboys in large scale ranching.

Not more than ten days ago he attended the national superintendent's convention at Chicago, and the trip recalled his first visit to the city. He rode into the suburbs on the top of a cattle car, was greeted characteristically by the windy-city to the disadvantage of his hat which was lost in the wel- come. At the sheep scales where he went with his shipment of cattle, red faced and hatless, they supplied him with an inadequate felt-like hat. When he entered a nearby store to purchase one more suitable, the store clerks hurried to the department without inquiring for his needs, the spectacle of a hatless, sun-burned man being well known to their eyes.

New York Decision Sounds Death Knell For Fake Divorces

NEW YORK, March 18.—The adage, "Marry in haste and repent at leisure," has teeth put in it by a decision of the appellate division of the supreme court, which, it is said, will prevent New Yorkers wishing to rid themselves of matrimonial ties, going to Reno, Nev., and other places to obtain legal relief.

The decision makes permanent an injunction granted by Supreme Justice Donnelly last July restraining Archibald W. Gwathey, a New York broker, from prosecuting an action started in Florida to obtain a divorce from Isabelle C. Gwathey. The appellate decision rendered by unanimous vote holds that Gwathey's change of residence was a fraud upon his wife's matrimonial rights, that they were married in New York and had their legal residence there.

The decision is interpreted to mean that persons married in New York state or maintaining their matrimonial residence here cannot go outside the state and set up a residence that will be recognized as legal.

"This decision sounds the death knell for fake divorces," said Edmund L. Mooney, counsel for Mrs. Gwathey, when apprised of the court's finding. "It also goes a long way toward solving a national situation which has given rise to much agitation for a national divorce law. Any one may go into the supreme court of New York now, whenever an action is started against him or her in another state, and get an injunction."

Rub Away Children's Colds

Let them breathe in healing vapors all night

A "vapor lamp in salve form," Vicks is the DIRECT treatment for all cold troubles. Absorbed, like a liniment, and at the same time, inhaled as a vapor, the medication reaches immediately the congested air passages.

Kiddies do take cold so easily! A change of weather—or just getting feet wet—frequently starts them sneezing.

Some little ones go from one cold to another—never have a chance to build up any strength.

A mistake to keep them indoors

And so, the fear of recurring colds leads many mothers to keep their children too much indoors.

This is a mistake. Children kept too warm are most apt to take cold.

There is nothing like fresh air play to harden little folk, so that they do not take cold so easily.

The mother's problem

It is best, therefore, to let children run outside in all weathers.

Of course, some colds will result.

The problem has been how to treat these colds without constant internal dosing—so disturbing to their delicate stomachs.

Vicks answers this need

Vicks VapoRub, the invention of a North Carolina druggist, offers the solution.

Applied externally, it can be used as freely and as often as desired, without any harmful effect.

And use of Vicks at night does not require shutting the windows. Just leave the bed-covers loose about the child's neck and the rising vapors will be inhaled all night.

Often averts spasmodic croup

One application of Vicks at bedtime often serves to prevent a threatened attack of spasmodic croup.

And when an attack comes on without warning, in the night, use of Vicks as directed frequently brings relief in 15 minutes.

A family standby

For other cold troubles of children, such as sore throat, chest colds, head colds and tonsillitis, Vicks gives equally quick action.

For surface inflammations it is useful every day—cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, boils, itching skin troubles, chapped skin and chilblains.

And just as good for cold troubles of grown-ups—bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, laryngitis, pharyngitis.

Doubly a direct action

Vicks works immediately and directly in affections of the air passages. Like a liniment, it is absorbed thru and stimulates the skin. This relieves soreness, loosens phlegm and eases difficult breathing.

Like a vapor lamp, the application over the throat and chest sends up healing vapors, which are inhaled as each breath directly into the congested, inflamed air passages.

Invented by a Southern druggist

Some years ago, Lunenburg Richardson, a druggist of Greensboro, N. C., was seeking a better way to treat cold troubles.

He found how to combine the best of nature's remedies for colds into salve form.

Camphor, Menthol, Eucalyptus, Thymol, Turpentine and other volatile ingredients are so mixed in this salve that their vapors are imprisoned until application brings contact with the natural heat of the body.

Then those ingredients are released in the form of vapors, given off evenly, steadily and thoroughly for hours after application.

Thus, Vicks is really a vapor lamp in salve form.

Ingredients of great antiquity

Some of Vicks ingredients have been tested by use for many generations past.

For the Instant, Menthol is a derivative of the Oil of Peppermint, which was produced in Egypt 3000 years ago, and is mentioned in the Icelandic medical books of the Thirteenth Century.

Several of the ingredients of Vicks—Camphor, Menthol, Eucalyptus, Thymol, Oil of Turpentine—are given credit in the United States Dispensary, our highest authority on drugs and their actions, for the very effects that are most desired in all kinds of cold troubles.

How Vicks should be used

For Spasmodic Croup, Children's Colds—Rub Vicks over the throat and chest until the difficult breathing is relieved, then spread on thickly and cover with a hot flannel cloth. One application at bed time usually prevents a night attack of croup.

For Deep Chest Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Bronchitis, Coughs—Vicks should be applied over the throat and chest—if necessary, first using hot, wet cloths to open the pores of the skin—then rubbed in well until the skin is red; spread on thickly and covered with one of two thicknesses of hot flannel clothing. If the cough is annoying, a small piece the size of a pea can be swallowed every few hours.

For Head Colds, Asthma, Catarrh, Hay Fever—Vicks should be mixed in a spoon and the vapors inhaled, or a little can be applied up the nostrils and snuffed up the head.

Vapors important

Remember that half the effect of Vicks is in the inhalation of its vapors. So when applied over throat and chest leave bed-covers and night clothing loose at the neck so that these vapors can be freely inhaled.

COUNTY ASSESSOR WILL FINISH HIS WORK BY APRIL 30

County Tax Assessor Irvin Deaton reported Sat. day that the work of assessing property for taxes was progressing rapidly and without much trouble and that every indication at the present time was that the outside work would be completed by April 30, the date specified by law when this work should be concluded.

With the exception of one block and three large office buildings the business district of the city has been worked. There are of course some few exceptions.

In the residence part of the city the work is proceeding without much trouble and the field deputy is of the opinion that he will finish the city before April 30.

The assessor in Iowa Park has reported that in all probability he will have his rolls completed by the end of March.

The assessor announces that people who are not approached by the assessor would be benefiting both themselves and him by coming to the office and filing a return.

STEADY PROGRESS ON ALL PARTS OF IRRIGATION WORK

SECOND SHOVEL STARTS OPERATIONS AT SITE OF MAIN DAM.

"SHIPBUILDING" PHASE NOW WELL UNDER WAY

Surveys and Right-of-Way Work in Progress on Additional Part of Canal.

Installation of a second steam shovel at the site of the storage dam, to speed up operations there, has been completed by irrigation project contractors, and more rapid progress on that phase of the work is expected from now on.

The keel of the dredge at the storage dam has been laid and material is on hand for the completion of this piece of equipment, the first and probably last shipbuilding operation to be staged on the Big Wichita river. It will be two months at least before the dredge is ready to begin operations. An office has been established here by the Pudget Sound Dredging and Drainage company which will operate the dredge.

At the diversion dam, the task of driving the sheet piling is about one-third complete, and the contractor is now "puddling" the piling that has already been driven.

The several ditch sub-contractors are making consistent progress, and the footings of completed canal increases from day all along the 17 miles covered by existing sub-contractors. Surveys and right of way work for the remaining section of the canal, which will terminate near Call Field, are going forward rapidly.

There have been no further obstacles as yet in the right of way work, and the district is hopeful that the one condemnation suit already decided upon will be the last one as well.

Crews constructing the power line along the Wichita Valley right of way are making good progress and the line is expected to be in operation some time in May.

10 PER CENT CONVICTIONS IN FELONY CASES IN 1921, SAYS REPORT TO CITIZENS

Table with columns: Charge, Convictions, Dismissals, Totals. Rows include No charges shown, Violation highway law, Swindling, etc.

Just a little over 10 per cent of the criminal cases tried in district courts of Wichita county in 1921 resulted in convictions, the figures being 24 out of 236, according to the data compiled for the executive committee of the Citizens' association. The final portion of the report was made public Saturday.

An interesting portion of the report deals with bonds made in criminal cases. Bonds aggregating over $14,000 are signed by one firm of lawyers, and another firm's members are sureties on a second large batch of bonds.

...I have found in this court, a complete showing on the docket in cases disposed of or in process of being disposed of, and learned that this is brought about even though one were inclined to be careless by the fact, that the court attaches are subject to inspection and check at any time. Such checks must at all times tally with the reports mailed to headquarters.

"Under this head wish to say that it is impossible to secure a satisfactory record to amounts, gathered or transferred from either the police, constable or sheriff's department, signatures on bonds for such violations are scattered, and lists of same will be furnished special."

"The same criticism applies to this court as to others in that there is a laxness of keeping trial dockets in such manner that they will show data of cases and one would be compelled to go through the files to learn what should be found on the trial dockets.

"Realizing that the cases in this court are gathered from a large territory, this report only includes violations of the prohibition laws acted upon in 1921, which show: conviction, 6; pleas of guilty, 8; dismissed and acquitted, 10; con-

BACK-TRAILING ON THE OLD FRONTIERS

How the La Verendryes, Canadian Voyageurs and Explorers, Searching for a Passage to a Mysterious Western Sea, Discovered Rocky Mountains

By W. W. CHEELY

When France was mistress of half of North America the dream of the many bold spirits among her explorers and voyagers was the finding of a northwest passage to the Western sea, as they designated the Pacific ocean, and to this end they devoted much valorous effort. It meant fighting their way across trackless wilderness for thousands of miles and the braving of countless dangers. These courageous men went forth into the battle of wild beasts and the Indian country for the glory of France and adventure. The bones of many of them were left to bleach where they died, and all they left behind them was the record of a vain effort, as far as the finding of an outlet to the Pacific was concerned. It was this quest that led to the discovery of the Rocky mountains. It seems singular that the great backbone of the North American continent, with peaks measuring three miles high from sea level silhouetting the sky for hundreds of miles north and south, was first seen by a man of the white race only 172 years ago.

Prominent among the gentleman adventurers and explorers of the New France of that day was the Sieur de La Verendrye. All his life he had trekked through the western wilds, going where no white man had gone before, seeking for that which he and his fellows could not find, and finally, in his old age, passing the work of finding a passage to the west on to his devoted son, Pierre, and the Chevalier, who had accompanied him on many of his expeditions. And although the La Verendryes failed to find a way to the sea of the west they carried the tri-color of France far into unexplored territory and helped to make possible the achievements and discoveries of those who followed him. Particularly in the matter of founding posts, the outposts of France, were they of service to their country, and of this work Pierre, in his history of the Hudsons Bay company, says:

"We are fortunate in having an account of these affairs (the building of forts) given in DeBougainville's memoirs, two years before the capture of Canada by the English. The forts built by La Verendrye's successors included the 'Post of the Western Sea,' the most advanced towards the north. It is situated among many Indian tribes, with whom we trade and who have intercourse with the English, towards the Hudson's bay. We have there several forts, trusted generally to the care of one or two officers, seven or eight soldiers and 30 engages Canadians. We can push further the discoveries made in that country and can communicate even with California."

DeBougainville goes on to say that the "Post of the Western sea" merits special attention for two reasons. "The first, that it is the nearest to the establishment of the English on the Hudson's bay, and from which the movements of the English can be watched; the second, that from this post the discovery of the Western sea may be accomplished," the hope and dream of all loyal Frenchmen in the new land.

In one of his expeditions the elder La Verendrye went far into the west, reaching what is now North Dakota. There, on the Missouri river, he found the Mandan Indians and was the first white man to visit them. These Indians lived in comfortable huts and tilled fields and were far in advance of their red brothers of red tribes. La Verendrye established friendly relations with them, and it was because of the good impression that he made that the tribe afforded sustenance and shelter to many explorers who came after him, including Lewis and Clark.

Mandan Legends of White Men.

The Mandans told La Verendrye of many things which interested him. They said that far to the west was a great body of salt water, a lake, the waters of which rose and fell, and on the shores of which abode white men who wore beards, and who worshipped the master of life in great houses which they had built for this purpose, "holding books, the leaves of which were like Indian corn, and singing in their worship."

From this La Verendrye assumed two things: Indians who had visited the Mandans had been on the shore of the sea for which he was looking, or had come in contact with Spanish settlements to the west. He thought perhaps the Spaniards were getting a foothold too far north and were putting French interests in jeopardy. So he and the long trip back from the upper Missouri country to Montreal to acquaint his government with this important news and to get authority and money to lead an expedition further west to block the Spaniard, and perhaps to find the Western sea. His tale was listened to by an indifferent governor, and no cash was forthcoming.

By this time La Verendrye was in the winter of life, old because of the life of hardship he had led, and broken in health. He felt unequal to the task of continuing his work, which he must do on his own resources, and reluctantly passed his mission on to his sons, Pierre and the Chevalier, whom he had schooled in woodcraft, and who shared his enthusiasm for his purpose. Without means and with but two fellow countrymen, they went out into the west, their destination being the land of the Mandan nation, where, after a trip of great hardship, they arrived in the spring of 1742. Their purpose was to learn the sources of the stories which the Mandans had told their father, and to continue the search for the passage into the west.

The Mandans, their father's friends, received them hospitably. At that time the Mandans were expecting a visit from a tribe known as the Snake Indians, migratory redskins whom the Mandan chiefs believed could guide the French explorers to salt water. The La Verendryes waited for a month and then, with Mandan guides, started out in search of them. Instead, they found the Crow, who could but repeat the tale that had come to the Mandans, and sent them further west with Crow guides to the Bow Indians, of the Sioux family.

When the La Verendryes arrived at the Bow encampment they found these Indians about to go to war with the Snake tribe, and were gathering their warriors and those of their allies in great numbers. They knew nothing of the way to the Western sea, but suggested that the Frenchmen accompany them on their expedition against the Snake, which meant traveling to the west and towards the mountains, where, from Snake prisoners or other Western Indians they might be able to learn something of the much sought for passage. The Frenchmen gladly accepted the invitation, and the great force of warriors and their families moved slowly towards the country of their enemies, gathering strength as they traveled.

Called Rockies 'Shining Mountains.'

On January 1, 1743, a snow-capped mountain range loomed up before them, the peaks, in the far distance, scintillating in the bright sunshine like diamonds. The poetic Frenchmen named them the "Shining Mountains," as they are known in poetry and Indian legend to this day. For the first time the white race, through the eyes of the La Verendrye, was looking upon the great range of the Rocky mountains. The explorers are agreed that the range of mountains which met their vision at this point was the Big Horn range, about 150 miles east of the Yellowstone park, at that time the explorers and their Indian friends must have been near the northeastern boundary of what is now Wyoming.

In passing, it should be said that there was no battle at this time between the Bow and the Snake, the latter having heard through their scouts of the host that was at their heels, and sought safety in flight. The Bow had left their women and children in a camp further east from where they had expected to fight. A rumor came to the Bow camp that the Snakes had attacked this camp, and the Bow, in a riot, rushed pell mell back to protect their families, only to find, when they arrived at the camp, that they had not been molested.

Carried Tri-Color Far Into West.

The La Verendryes then parted company with the Bow who had helped them in every possible way, and became the guests of the Choke Cherry Indians, of the Sioux or Dakota family. They had no knowledge of a passage to the Western sea, and the La Verendryes, now without resources and unable to proceed further, gave up the quest. They had carried the flag of their country further west than any explorers of their time or before, and had made friends for France among many powerful Indian tribes controlling the country drained by the upper Missouri river. It is possible that they were obsessed with some vague idea of the importance of the discovery, and to commemorate their achievement, on an eminence near the camp of the Choke Cherry Indians, they buried a leaden plate engraved with the arms of the king of France, and built over it a cairn of stones.

Early in April the La Verendryes started on their long return journey to the Mandan villages and from there they went back to Montreal, the journey requiring months. In honor of their achievements, the elder La Verendrye was made a captain of the Order of St. Louis, and the two sons were given minor posts in the army. But their rewards were not in keeping with what they had done for France. Aside from granting them certain fur trading privileges, which in their zeal for exploration they failed to develop and profit by, there was no financial reward for them, and, as they had financed their own expeditions for 15 years, they were ruined. The elder La Verendrye died in 1750, and after the English had conquered Canada, the Chevalier sailed for France on the ship Auguste, which was lost at sea with all on board.

What Do You Know About Your Watch?

Copyright, 1922, by Public Ledger Company

The Man Who Tests Timepieces Tells of the Great Master Clock Kept in an Underground Dungeon by Uncle Sam By William Atherton Du Puy

SINCE time began and the ingenuity of man set itself to work to develop mechanical devices to serve it, no more nearly perfect and marvelous thing has been evolved than the watch which men wear on their wrists or in their pockets.

Everybody uses this remarkable device, but almost nobody extends it any consideration. They twist its neck at bedtime and let it go at that. They little dream, for instance, that the watches of the Nation are face to face with a great emergency, because of a lack of repairsmen.

The man of them all to whom we should logically turn in such matters, the man whom the Government itself employs to study for it the problems of the watch that arise among the hundred millions of people who go to make it up, made these assertions to me.

This man's name is Arthur F. Beal, and he wears a doctor's degree because of his scientific training, although, three decades ago, he was a farmer boy who hunted birds with a slingshot and gathered the eggs in his hat.

Dr. Beal is one of those scientists employed by the Government whose lives revolve around that great institution, the Bureau of Standards, which sits on a hill overlooking Washington and which keeps abreast of the scientific world that the people may not lose an opportunity to use the findings of a vital and in every way remarkable age.

It is at this institution that the Government has an instrument that is so delicate that it will measure the heat from the rays of a candle in a window a mile away. It is here that it has a machine so powerful that it will pull great steel girders as big as railroad ties in two. It is here that it is working on the problem of transmitting lead into other metals and of using a ray of light as the standard for measuring dimensions. It is here that it takes samples of paper apart and counts their fibers to determine the amount of wood pulp and fibers that go to make them up. It mills strings in two and measures their tensile strength, cranes building stone to determine the weight of building it will support. It is here that the products that the people use in their daily life may be sent for testing and among these their watches. And Dr. Beal is the guardian of the Nation's watches.

"The watch is so much an everyday utility," says Dr. Beal, "that people fail to appreciate the remarkable instrument that it is. There are many machines, as, for instance, the typewriter or the type-setting machine, that perform marvelous tasks, but their construction requires nothing like the precision necessary in the construction of a watch. There are about 165 pieces in the ordinary watch and many of these have to be in sizes that must not vary one two-thousandth of an inch in all dimensions. There are no such refinements in your typewriter.

"These 165 pieces have to be fitted together in the space inside the tiny timepiece of today. The balance wheel is but one in the 165, but it alone requires scores of operations of machines used in its manufacture. However perfect the machinery for making these parts, no two can be produced that are exactly the same size or weight. Every balance wheel is weighed on scales so delicate as to sort them into various grades. Trays of these various weights sit before the assemblers in the watch factory. Each balance wheel must be matched with a hair spring that will compensate for its variations. If it happens to be a trifle heavy a hair spring of a little greater strength must be selected to turn it back and forth in just the right time.

"There are tiny screws that are put into much truth in it, and illustrates the point. One may invest $5 in iron. If he works it up into horseshoes, it is worth $10. If he makes knives of it, it is worth $200. If he converts it into needles, it climbs in value to $6800. If he converts it into mainsprings it has a value of $200,000, and if he makes hair springs of it the value which it acquires is $2,000,000. Such is the refinement of the watch-making industry."

IT WAS an odd sort of office in which I interviewed this Government authority upon timepieces. Along one side of its walls were various cabinets and trays in which were arranged miscellaneous lots of watches. Each watch was being set to run its course, and the performance of each was being duly recorded and measured by that marvelous clock in the basement which is the Government standard timepiece. These watches had been sent to the Bureau of Standards for testing by different individuals and organizations from all over the country. If an importer is buying heavily of watches abroad, he may want them officially tested and can send them here for that purpose. If a jeweler in Houston, Tex., is buying watches of a manufacturer in New England, he can have them matched up against this father clock of the Government to see how they run. If a conductor is buying a watch, upon the accuracy of which may depend either life or death, he can send it here for testing. If an individual takes pride in his timepiece and wants its performance measured by the Government, he can send it to the Bureau of Standards for that purpose. In every case a fee of $1.50 is charged by the Government for testing the watch, but no repair work is undertaken.

In the manner in which these watches are tested an indication is given of some of the difficulties that must be met by a timepiece. Each watch is tested in five different positions—standing up, on one edge, on the other, on its face, and on its back. The watch may often keep excellent do the gateways to refrigerating plants. In the inner chamber stood the father clock itself. The idea of its isolation was to give it a room with a constant temperature, because changes in temperature result in changes of atmospheric pressure, and changes of atmospheric pressure cause differences in the swing of the pendulum and, therefore, in the time that this clock keeps. In the attempt to get perfect time out of this father clock, this scientific bureau so arranged the surroundings of the clock that it is rare, indeed, that there is a variation of one degree of temperature in the space of a month.

The father clock, which is the most perfect in the world in its compensations, stands there against the wall, hermetically sealed in a glass cylinder. The chamber in which its pendulum swings is an almost perfect vacuum. The most delicate means of regulating a clock in an attempt to get accurate time is by making the air in which its pendulum swings more or less rare, and in the case of this clock a little air is let in

The five positions in which watches are tested

The instrument by which watches are tested by the Government

DR. ARTHUR F. BEAL

"The tiny watches that women wear on their wrists have the least chance of them all to keep good time. The woman's watch that swings from a ribbon around her neck likewise is subjected to the likelihood of its getting many hard bumps. On the other hand, the watch worn in this way is kept pretty much in one position and has a better chance than the wrist watch. I might add that it is the coming fad for women to wear their watches in this way. The woman's watch which is pinned to her dress has an even better chance.

"In buying a watch there is another question of common sense to be considered just as there is in buying an automobile. This is the question of spare parts. It is well to know whether or not the spare parts for your watch are available at the average repair station."

"What is the average life span of a watch?" I asked.

"It is not what it ought to be," and Dr. Beal shook his head sadly. "As a matter of fact the average lifetime of a watch is only about four years. The number of watches sold in the United States is something enormous.

"About 15,000 new watches are sold in the United States every day. There are probably 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 watches distributed among the people."

"Why," I asked, "do the watches not last longer?"

"Because of the difficulty in getting them repaired," said Dr. Beal.

UPON this Government authority I proceeded to paint a very melancholy picture of the situation that confronts the wearers of watches. He said that the supply of watchmakers available was such that there were not enough to go around. They were growing scarcer and fewer of them were being produced.

Until the present generation watch-making was largely a task of handwork in which the mechanic knew the detail of all processes. Then along comes the American idea of quantity production as applied to this craft. The worker in the watch factory becomes an individual who presides over a machine which stamps out a certain part. He knows little more about the completed product than does anybody else. The watch goes down a line of assemblies and each one puts in a part, adjusts a screw. Finally it reaches the adjuster, who is virtually the only man in the shop who considers it as a whole. He studies it, adjusts it, tests it. He, with a little special training, could become a watch repairman, but he is about the only man in the factory whose experience would aid him in this direction. The American factories ceased a generation ago to turn out watch repairmen.

The quantity production scheme of watch-making developed in America and was quite slow in spreading to Europe. Over there they continued to make watches by hand. They continued, therefore, to produce workmen who were capable of becoming skilled watch repairmen. So it has happened for a generation that the United States has drawn quite heavily upon certain European countries, notably Switzerland and Austria, for watch repairmen. Of late, however, the American idea of quantity production and the American machines for making watch parts have found their way into the industry in Europe and are displacing the workmen who learned to understand the whole process of making a watch. So it comes to pass that the production of watch repairmen in Europe has about ceased and that our supply of competent men from that source is being shut off.

"This looks like a quite hopeless situation," I ventured. "Is there anything which can be done to relieve it?"

"As a matter of fact," said Dr. Beal, "there is a concerted movement being launched just at present which will attempt to solve this problem. It is hoped that the needed watchmakers will be obtained and that all men in the trade will be classified so that the individual may have some way of knowing whether or not he is instructing his watch to a competent man."

"There is in the United States an organization known as the Horological Institute of America, which was recently organized by the National Research Council of Washington, and is a recognized organization of the horologists of the Nation. Jewelers, watchmakers, clockmakers, all of those people who are interested in a technical knowledge of timepieces, are horologists, and the purpose of this institute is to bind these men together for the solution of their problems. The greatest problem just at present is securing repairmen and they are approaching this problem with determination.

"The first thing that the Horological Institute of America wants to do is to require of repairmen certain tests. These tests it, as a national organization, will administer and it will grade the watch repairmen according to demonstrated skill, and will classify them into three grades depending upon their proficiency in repairing watches. It will then issue to them certificates indicating the degree of their skill. A man whose watch is out of order may therefore ask the watchmaker if he has a certificate from the Horological Institute of America, and if he has, the degree of his skill in his trade will be shown on the certificate by the title that is given him by this institute. Jewelers everywhere will, of course, be anxious that their repairmen should have such certificates and will insist upon their undergoing these tests. Watchmakers everywhere will be anxious to get these cards because they will be guarantees of employment wherever they go. The Horological Institute of America is just now ready to begin giving examinations to watchmakers.

"In addition to administering these tests, the Horological Institute of America appreciates the great necessity of producing competent watch repairmen. It is making every effort to encourage boys learning watch repairing to remain in school longer so that they may become competent men for this line of work, for which there is great demand and assured opportunity. There are several good schools which teach the art of watchmaking. Bradley Polytechnic School, at Peoria, Ill., has a horological department. At the Bowman Technical School at Lancaster, Pa., instruction is also given in watchmaking. The New England Jewelers' Institute is a school at Milford, Mass., which teaches the art of watchmaking. At Elgin, Ill., in connection with the large watch factories of that city, a very elaborate school is just now being established."

Uncle Sam's most accurate timepiece, which varies but three seconds in a year the rim of the balance wheel to give it required weight in regulating. The difference in weight between two of these screws, made by the same machine and supposed to be just alike, may make all the difference between good time and poor time.

"The refinement of this trade of watchmaking may be indicated by the value of the materials that go into the finished product. I have seen the following statement, the absolute accuracy of which I do not vouch for, but which undoubtedly has time in one, or two, or three positions, and its adjustment may be such that in the fourth position it may lose or gain. One of the tasks of infinite delicacy is that of adjusting the watch in such a way that it will run equally well in all positions.

Dr. Beal led me into the holy of holies of time regulation, which was the clockroom in the basement of the building in which he worked. To get to that room it was necessary to pass through two or three doors which swung weightily on their hinges as or drawn out of the pendulum chamber whenever a variation is desired.

This scientific clock, thus carefully handled, is so regulated that it varies less than one one-hundredth of a second in a day. In the course of twelve months it sometimes deviates from correct time. Such erratic conduct is very much to the chagrin of its custodian and a thing for which he is inclined to apologize.

One would think that this official timepiece of this scientific bureau of the Government would be a clock which rarely required winding. An odd thing about it is that it is not an eight-day clock, nor even a twenty-four-hour clock. As a matter of fact, if it is not wound once in every thirty seconds it runs down. Once in each thirty seconds an electrical contact is made and automatically the little weight which runs the clock is again pulled up and goes on its way.

Upstairs in the office of Dr. Beal there is a changing machine which notes in an exaggerated way the ticking of the old clock downstairs. Methodically it goes on clanging out the passing of the standardized seconds. Simultaneously with these markings of time a pen passes over a cylinder of paper and automatically draws a chart of the seconds that go by. Thus is a record established by which is measured the timepieces which the public sends in for testing.

"What sort of watch should I select when I go to buy?" I asked this Government authority.

"In the first place," he replied, "it is obvious that the smaller the watch is the more difficult it must be to get all its parts properly adjusted. A tiny watch that is a good timepiece requires very much greater skill and delicacy in manufacture and adjustment. It would, therefore, seem to be the part of wisdom to buy a watch that is not too small.

"If one hopes to get good results from his timepiece he should give it a chance. Wearing a watch on the wrist, for instance, is one of the severest tests that can be given it. It is placed in every conceivable position and is constantly changing positions, and, therefore, the unavoidable errors introduced by this treatment accumulate in large quantities.

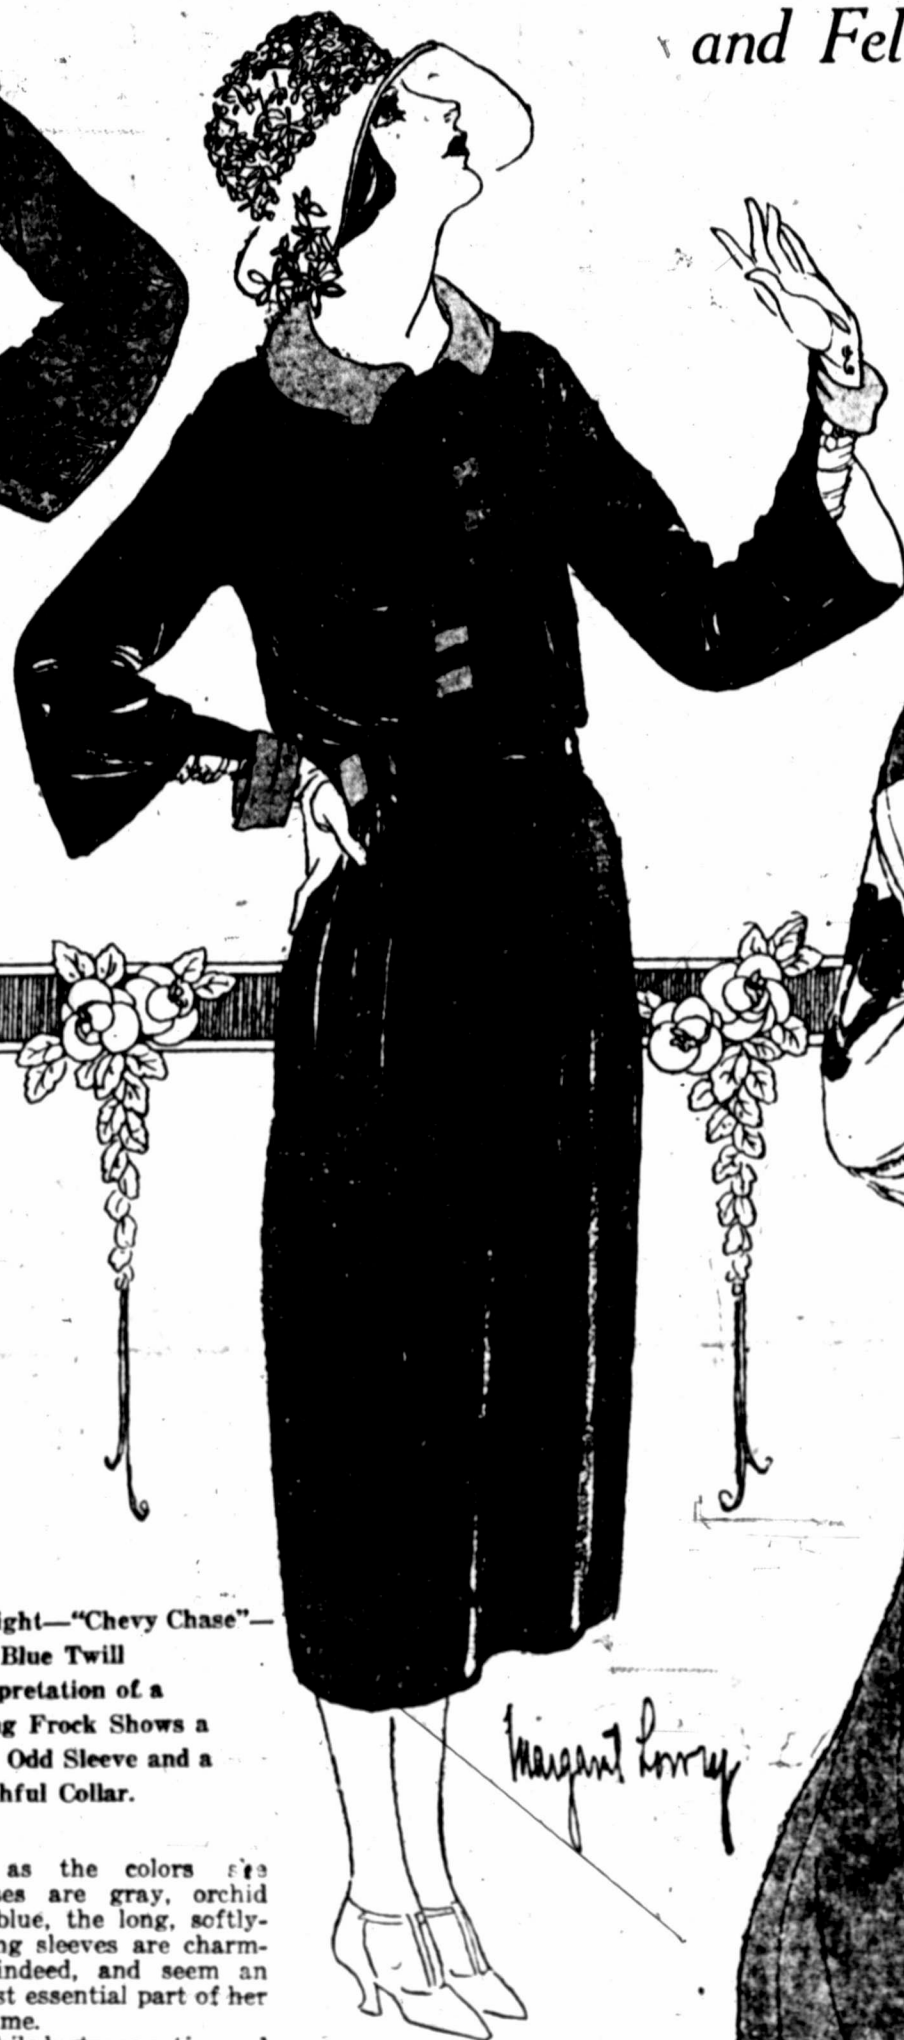

"Obviously the watch which reposes in one's vest pocket is subjected to fewer disturbances than if it is worn on the wrist. It is likely to be larger, also, and therefore, has a better chance.

The Famous Creator of Fashions

If those who crave newness wish the creators to jump from one style extreme to the other, they will find disappointment in the gradual evolution which progresses from season to season. But if they follow the changes which are in progress all about, they will find much that is interesting and new in fashion lines for spring.

Skirt lengths are always a matter of absorbing interest, and it seems that this question may rest for the present at eight inches from the floor. Some sports things are even shorter, but the threat of skirt lengths that trailed has ceased to frighten the woman who prizes her freedom. Recent fashion shows and style reviews have observed the eight-inch rule, and this popular acceptance has for the time being, at least, banished the threat of longer skirts, which most women fear rather than welcome.

Of course, the trailing loops and ends are sponsored, and in every case they add to the sum total of skirt length. But in the trim, smart frock for spring street wear, even the trailing panel or sash is more the exception than the rule.

The Essential Wool Frock

Sleeves sometimes reach proportions almost alarming in their magnitude, while others strike a more conservative note in their slightly flare or plain, tightly-fitted lines. The woman who has not the height to carry off very long or voluminous sleeves must be careful in her choice of sleeve detail for her gowns. Sleeves which are too big for the wearer can spoil the effect of an otherwise charming gown. On the other hand, sleeves of picturesque proportions are lovely on the stately wearer who has the proper height to carry them off. One wearer who has the knack of dressing to type, is choosing frocks for early summer, all with long-pointed sleeves reaching almost to the ground. She affects soft, misty materials for these, and as the colors she chooses are gray, orchid and blue, the long, softly-flowing sleeves are charming indeed, and seem an almost essential part of her costume.

While lustrous satins and soft, shiny silks are very smart for spring frocks, a frock or two of some woolen fabric is essential in the spring wardrobe. Kasha, which is unequalled in its softness, charmingly interprets the trim simplicity of the spring frock, while serge, silk serge and fine twill are other favored fabrics.

Concerning the Chapeaux

Before describing the costumes above, it is well to say a word on hats in general. Milan will be a favored material for early spring, while many of the smartest hats are developed in the same material as the suit or gown. This treatment is particularly noticeable in sports types, the fabric often being combined with straw, which is used for facing or for the crown of the hat.

Felts of the sports types are also much seen. A smart little chapeau worn with a yellow knitted suit is of felt in dandelion yellow, trimmed at the side with a pendant cluster of black cherries and glaze leaves. Another yellow hat, which color by the way is much in vogue for spring, is covered with yellow flowers and trimmed at the side with a blue and yellow parrot. A yellow parasol with the smart, short handle which is new, completes the costume.

The cutaway, or shortened back brim, is being introduced, while other hats show a V-shaped cut taken from the side. A smart semi-sports hat of this type is of white, the crown and upper brim entirely covered in tiny green flowers.

The past season has seen the introduction of delightful variety in dress trimmings, by using brightly colored bits from old Paisley shawls or any colorful trimming yielded from the rich stores of the far Eastern and European countries. This inspiration gives distinction to "The Sheik," the navy twill frock at the left above, which forms its collar, cuffs and surplice blouse facing from parts of an old East Indian shawl. Of a soft mellow red in tone, it brings in dashes of color and little squares of mirror in quaint design. The surplice blouse accents the youthful lines of the wearer as it folds about the figure and ties a jaunty bow at the back. The skirt with its pointed hemline introduces further irregularity by flying side panels, also finished in points, which drop down longer at either side. These panels are lined in blue crepe.

The little off-the-face hat remains with us by sheer force of becomingness, and not because it brings with it anything of decided newness. This popular shape is becoming to the more mature as well as to the youthful face, and after all, the becomingness of a style is the most important reason for its remaining. The attractive model which tops this frock is of black satin and shows a smart note in its softly-looped bow which is drawn through the brim and loops down at the side.

Also of navy twill is "Chevy Chase," the second frock from the left, which introduces rose silk serge in its smart trim-

The black liere straw hat has its crown mashed to one side after the smart new fashion, while an airy bit of feather is its only trimming.

Rose tint stockings of a very light silk and wool mixture, and black patent pumps complete the costume. This outfit is of special interest, for it introduces several notes well-thought-of for spring. First of all, kasha is one of the smartest spring fabrics. It was received with enthusiasm when the first kasha importations were seen in this country. So rapidly do the designers of fabrics scatter new materials from the looms that it becomes difficult to find names for them, much less to keep in touch with the new examples of this art.

This rose frock also introduces the collar and vestee, which are appearing in attractive colors and designs to enliven spring creations. Stockings in tints to match all frocks, and which form a perfect match for the tweeds with which they are often worn, also merit attention as a spring innovation.

"Yes, Dear," second from the right, is of beige cotton crepe embroidered in brown, which combination voices two of the most popular spring colors. The wide belt sections appear only at the sides, and form a foundation for the black satin tabs and the skirt fullness which they overlap. Bright colors appear in the stitching which marks the dropped shoulder seams.

The beige felt hat is bound in orange leather, while beige quills complete the air of jauntiness.

The narrow belt extends across the back and fastens with odd buttons at either side in front, also confining the skirt fullness here at the sides. The sleeves loop out as if attempting a flare, but below this they are drawn in by little turn-back cuffs of the rose color. A cunning note is introduced in the gloves which pass under the cuffs above them, filling in the space where the sleeve is cut out.

The violet-trimmed lavender crepe hat is lovely with the navy and rose frock.

"Pour Dejeuner," at the right of the page, strikes a less conservative note for spring, for it is of rose color kasha cloth, bound all about in black soutache braid. The stiff white linen collar and vest give a note of freshness, while a smart black tie and black buttons complete the effect. Applied belt sections confine the fullness at either side.

The Fashion Forecast

Beige and sand will be the ultra-smart shades for spring.

Dorothy Deacon's Very Mysterious Marriage Annulment and its Sequel

Society Was Asking Who Forced Her to Marry Prince Radziwill, and Then She Became the Countess Palfy Before the Ink on the Decree Voiding Her Marriage to the Prince Was Really Dry.

Duchess of Marlborough, the Former Gladys
Deacon, Last of the Three Deacon Sisters
to Marry

By Betty Van Benthuyzen

DID the little elves of the Michigan forests combine to pursue the Deacon family because the axe of Edward Deacon felled their great tree friends to turn them into millions? It would seem that something of the kind took place, for there has been a strange and almost unnamable series of events involving the heirs of the man who was known as the Lumber King, long before Weyerhaeuser came to that distinction and succeeded to his throne.

And now it is the former Princess Radziwill who comes along with the last chapter of the family story—a story in which the most brilliant social events, the homage of the Old World to New World beauty, the ringing of wedding bells and the glamour of the most brilliant capitals supply the high lights for such shadows as divorce, weeping, murder and death in an insane institution.

Almost in the same twenty-four hours that brought the news that the Sacred Rota Tribunal of the Vatican had, after eleven years of consideration, annulled the marriage of the beautiful Dorothy Deacon to Prince Radziwill, came the tidings of her engagement to Count Palfy, a Hungarian nobleman who had been much in evidence in continental society, and within ten days of the annulment the wires told of her marriage to him.

But in none of the reports was the mystery of her complaint against the Prince explained. The formal announcement said that the high church court had called the wedding void because she had "been forced into the match against her will."

How? What strange sort of prenuptial situation constituted the act of duress which the court considered grave enough to make the ceremony of no value in the eyes of God and the law?

A Guarded Secret

Radziwill belonged to a family that was powerful in the days of the Czar. One member of it owned the palace in Paris which former Ambassador Hugh Wallace rented for the American Embassy—a beautiful home, facing an interior garden which overlooked the Seine. The Prince owned an estate in his native land that was half as big as all France. The Bolsheviks confiscated it and banished him. When he married Dorothy Deacon at London in 1910 all Europe was interested. They went to Rome to live, and their entertainments were the talk of the smart world. The Princess went back to the days of Nero for the daring of her effects. On one occasion she made her entry into a ballroom seated in a chariot, drawn by two lions.

There was then no hint of undue influence in the marriage, although people wondered why the wedding, which was set for June 10, 1910, was not celebrated until July 5—a delay that was then explained by the statement that the Prince's mother had objected to the match and had declared that the Princess should never have equal rank with her son. Indeed, the Almoner de Gotta carried a star next to her name, indicating lesser rank. But still, there was nothing to show that the beautiful woman went to the altar at the will of another than herself.

The first break in their apparent happiness came when the Prince's father died and the Princess, expecting to take possession of the ancestral palace, found that her husband had signed an agreement to allow his mother to retain it for life in return for having paid his gambling debts. It is possible that the same agreement rendered him a Prince without a princely revenue of any sort, but the break came, and its slow-moving story was only recently ended with the Vatican's decree.

And then, the new marriage, and a new career with a new noble of a race far from her own type. That is only one of the many strange things that have come since the Michigan forests yielded their treasures to Edward Deacon, and were coined into gold which went to dazzle Europe, bringing smiles and tears in perplexing confusion. The train of untoward events in the family began at Cannes, France, in 1922. Ten years before Edward Parker Deacon, son of the Lumber King and father of the three beautiful Deacon sisters, had married the daughter of Admiral Charles Baldwin. In Cannes, Deacon surprised his wife in her chamber with Emile Abdell, a noted high roller, and killed him.

Sunday magazine readers are familiar with the trial of Deacon in France, his sentence to serve one year in prison, his pardon by President Carnot, and his subsequent return to Boston, where he died in an asylum.

While all of this family horror was engrossing the attention of the public, the three Deacon girls, Gladys, Dorothy and Edith, were taken under the wing of their grandparents, Admiral and Mrs. Charles H. Baldwin, who had a house in Fifth Avenue and a home at Newport. Mrs. Baldwin was so thoroughly of the elect that not even the pall of such a killing could extend to the three graces who enjoyed her protection.

And Nature came along to provide them with even a more powerful defense and a more formidable weapon—beauty of a type that commanded instant admiration and which developed as they grew up until their fame extended to Europe long before they ever dreamed of playing any important role there.

Society and nobility joined in the opinion that the wonderful gift of pulchritude that Fairy Fate had brought to the girls would eclipse any bar that might have come over the family escutcheon. The prediction was right. Even more than the wealth that was theirs, the powerful Baldwin support and the interest of influential friends, did face and form combine to batter down social antipathy.

Found a Husband at Home

Suitors flocked to the sides of the three girls. Dorothy married Radziwill; Edith, with a vision of a different sort, took unto herself an American, Henry G. Gray, son of the late Justice John Clinton Gray, one of the best known jurists of New York. Up to this writing she has dodged the jinx that seems to have been turned loose by the elves of the forest.

But, as for Gladys, she spurned all offers that came to her and remained an old maid to the astonishment of all comers until she suddenly came to the fore as the bride of the Duke of Marlborough, following his divorce from Consuelo Vanderbilt. Here has been one of the most remarkable chapters in all of the story.

When Grandmother Baldwin had Gladys under her wing at Newport, she became the warm friend of Consuelo Vanderbilt. Their devotion from girlhood was remarked on all sides. When Consuelo came to be married to the Duke, she wanted Gladys for an attendant. The wrath of Queen Victoria against scandal stepped in to bar the intention. When Consuelo, a Duchess, gained her own place at court, she again wished to shelter her friend. Again the old Queen intervened.

And thus she came to the age of 45 a spinster, still outside of the favor of the court. That much our readers know. But the new picture of Gladys Deacon as the Duchess of Marlborough, succeeding her old friend in that estate, is one of the most striking that has come in all of the international marital tangles.

The mature woman of 45, taking her wedding cake twenty-five years after the first prediction of a match was made, is today playing a big and important role in the affairs of the land whose sovereign looked askance when she knocked for recognition.

Underneath all of the lightness of London society, it seems that this remarkable woman had been growing and developing in a material way. She had learned the politics of the world. She knew the effect of the spoken and written phrase of a world politician, and had learned a degree of business routine that astonished those who saw her calmly take up the reins at Blenheim Palace.

The Duke never held much reputation for ability, either in business or politics, and London is being astounded by the direct and bold action of the new Duchess in matters which reveal unusual talent and strength. Great as are the Marlborough fortunes, they had been hit terrifically by the tax burdens of war. Whereas, the King who made the initial grant to the great soldier who stands first in the Marlborough line intended that no such burden should be imposed upon his chief warrior's estate, and expressly stipulated that the taxation should consist of the presentation to the King "each Aug. 3 of a flag and a standard"—tokens of the martial might of the race, the present Duke found 80 per cent. of his income swallowed by Moloch, by the route of the publican. And his great farm—by far the largest in all England, containing more than 15,000 acres, had the complaint of the English farming class that it is impossible for agriculture to thrive when the cost of production and taxes is in excess of the possible return from the land.

Did the new duchess play the grand dame in a drawing-room in the face of these facts?

Not a bit of it. One finds her going straight to the oppressed farm and taking command. One sees her at 5 o'clock in the morning coming from her room clad, not in any hunting garment to ride a fast hunter over the fields, but in overalls and heavy boots, ready for her start over the place to see just what is being done and how it can be done better. And she has developed an accurate knowledge of the financial and economic side of the game that bodes no good for that large and burdensome class that besets England no less than it does the United States—the food profiteer.

Such is the transformation of the eldest of the three beautiful Deacon sisters, the last to wed, and the first to take a hand in major affairs. Such is the latest condition which the forest elves of Michigan must tackle.

It is a queer story, this tangle of the Deacons, and it is to be doubted if any forest on earth—not even the fabled Black Forest with its wealth of legend and tragedy—ever produced such action as the old Deacon forests of Michigan have written into fact, through being coined into dollars.

The WANTED MAN by Harris Dickson

THE STORY THUS FAR

ON opposite sides of Lake Marmon, in Mississippi, are two large estates—Barrington, owned by Maj. Kenneth Stark, and Marmon, owned by Gen. Bob Clayton. Their owners have been at feud for many years.

THIRD INSTALLMENT.

The Trypt at the Lone Oak.

NOT often did Nat get into a fix whose tongue refused to operate. While Mr. Stuart didn't even look at him, Mr. Scurry walked up and down the gallery, and somebody else kept peering out of the parlor window.

He glanced at the man in the rocker, and yearned for those good old days when Little Mister Stuart swarmed all over him, to build a mole trap, to help train his pup.

After a quick glance at Scurry, who nodded, the young man replied, "O, yes, I remember that."

Old Nat straightened up a bit as he smiled and continued, "dem sho' was fine times when we used to go camp huntin' wid yo' pa an' Major Stark!"

"Certainly," the man answered, with another glance at Scurry.

"An' don't you remember," Nat edged closer and grew more confidential, "didn't you 'member de time when dat little ole Morris boy shot you in de arm?"

"Certainly, I remember that."

This gradual dawn of recollection encouraged the Negro to move still nearer and farther remind his playmate. "Ows yo' ain't forgot how dat young docter ached er'body 'bout cuttin' off yo' arm. An' how he de gen'l 'spited him, an' 'lowed he warn't de win'?"

front gate and slammed it behind him, while Scurry eyed the untouched dollar.

For a soft hearted person Nathaniel Stark toted a mighty hard head. Novel ideas were difficult to hammer in and fixed notions impossible to blast out.

"Huh! Plung me a dollar!" The outraged Negro kept brooding over this insult and muttering to himself as he tore through the thicket and patzed at the lake bank in the act of launching his dugout.

"Same as throwin' a bone to a dog, huh?" Offended as he was, impatient to put distance between himself and Marmon, with angry strokes of the paddle Nat sent his dugout gliding through the willows to open water.

From the bottom of an Isaak Walton soul he loved this lake, loved to drift and meditate and blink at its shiny ripples, loved to watch the lazy floating of his cork, loved to study the vast blue sky above him and probe the depths of another sky below.

"Nary Clayton wouldn't let it be, huh! Don't care what Mister Scurry say—dat warn't Mister Stark. It warn't Mister Stuart! It warn't!"

He glared at the man in the rocker, and yearned for those good old days when Little Mister Stuart swarmed all over him, to build a mole trap, to help train his pup.

After a quick glance at Scurry, who nodded, the young man replied, "O, yes, I remember that."

Old Nat straightened up a bit as he smiled and continued, "dem sho' was fine times when we used to go camp huntin' wid yo' pa an' Major Stark!"

"Certainly," the man answered, with another glance at Scurry.

"An' don't you remember," Nat edged closer and grew more confidential, "didn't you 'member de time when dat little ole Morris boy shot you in de arm?"

"Yes, blood runs swiftly in the tropics, and I have no time to waste."

At that she jumped down from her horse and came slipping through the cane before old Nat could lunge up and run. But he could not do so because the log that she didn't see him as he hurried to the edge of the lake, pulled aside some willows, and peered out.

"All safe, Adelaide," she called. "The men can't see us."

"They'll never see me," Mrs. Rastley said, slipping to her saddle and keeping on the far side of the cane, while Miss Barbara walked up and down as if she were in a hurry, sliding at leaves with her whip and looking toward the south end of the lake.

"I have never seen Mr. Clayton," Barbara admitted. "And you have known him from childhood?"

"No," she said. "I've just thought."

"Now, listen, Miss Barbara. Listen real good. 'Spotin' a young man comes a courtin' you. Dat man takes p'ticular pains to ack nice whilst you's watchin' 'em. Dat's his main bizness to show off befo' yo' face. But when yo' back's turned, an' tain't with his time to 'ceive a nigger, dat's how come I kin see through 'em."

Both girls winced at this undeniable truth, then Miss Barbara blazed up and ordered, "Uncle Nat, tell me exactly what he did."

"Well, Miss Barbara, it's like dis, I paddled over dere to see Mister Stuart, 'cause me an' him is always been good friends. I no sooner got to de gate den Mister Bart Scurry collared me. O, Stuart, come out here an' speak to Uncle Nat, so dat white feller come out on de gallery an' set in his rookin' chair; never shuck hands wid me er nothin' 'til his own manager hadn't claimed so, I'd never tuk him for a Clayton."

"What did he look like?"

"Lemme see. He peaked kinder tall, or maybe short; dat don't signify. Had on ridin' pants an' a brown shirt an' dat floppy hat o' his, wid a funny little mustache on bofe lips."

"He must be the same person," Adelaide was regretfully compelled to believe.

"Well," Barbara wanted to know all about it. "What did he do to you?"

"Do to me? Huh! Dat feller never set down a minut' befo' he rousted himself from his chair an' throwed down a dollar, an' 'lowed, 'Here, ole nigger, take dat dollar an' go home. I'm busy.'"

"That was it?"

Barbara never budged. Planting both feet squarely on the ground, she disputed the power of any man to drive her away. But old Nat felt mighty different. He was guilty of totting tales against the white folks, and had no pride in proving to a man's face what he had just asserted behind his back.

"Huh! Miss Barbara sho' did ax me 'bout questions den a constable. Ev'body makes such a fuss over dis feller, dat's how come de po' white trash ax so biggety. Plung me a dollar, huh!"

Old Nat was gone, but like a venomous wasp he left his sting behind, a sting that rankled in Barbara. Yet the girl steeled herself with such a composure that even the nervous Adelaide could not detect that Miss Stark was in any wise disturbed.

"Who do you think the impostor can be?" Mrs. Rastley whispered, and Barbara laughed aloud.

"Don't care what his name, he hasn't got the best of me."

This is a land of loving affinities between lakes and roads; ridges follow the water, and roads follow the ridges.

"Come on, Barbara, come on!" Like a frightened child Mrs. Rastley tugged at Barbara's arm, but Miss Stark stood her ground with a scornful curling of her lip.

"Whoever he might be, this stranger rode with such dash and verve that Adelaide dismissed all suspicions engendered by the Negro's idle tales. How snapping creole eyes defiantly approved him, while the cooler headed Miss Stark gave the suspect a far more searching scrutiny.

Whether Clayton or no, whether his manner were natural or assumed, he knew how to be courteously with ladies. And from his impartial cordiality no male person could have guessed which of these he loved.
