IN WEST PIONEER FIELD

A regular field project has inch long and light green in color. Greenbugs with their been staked three miles west piercing mouth parts suck plant juices. Toxins are inject ed into the plant during the feeding process. Small grain infested with greenbugs first turn vellow to orange. As infestation increases, plants die and greenbugs move to uninfested plants enlarging the affected area. Insecticide need depends on the number of greenbugs present, size and vigor of plants. time of year, moisture conditions and stage of growth. Wheat is usually less susceptible to greenbug damage than oats or barley. Armyworms are foliage feeders and can destroy an entire field in a matter of days if infestation is heavy. Color of armyworms may vary from a light green to black with dorsal stripes. Older plants can withstand higher infestations than seeding plants. Control recommendations on these and other insects are available from the County Extension office in Baird.
