TWO ARMING POWERS GIVE NO RESPONSE

Situation Remains Tense Between Russia and China

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The situation caused by the United States government's attempt to avert a Russo-Chinese war was tense today. It was the fifth day since the two arming powers were reminded by Secretary of State Stimson that they were obliged by the Kellogg peace treaty not to go to war, and neither nation has yet responded.

ENFORCEMENT COMMISSION IS BACK AT WORK

By RAYMOND CLAPPER
United Press Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, July 22.—The president's law enforcement commission resumed work today after an interim of several weeks. It comes back to work the center of new and intense public attention because of the recent letter of Chairman George W. Wickersham urging the states to assume a more definite share in prohibition enforcement.

REPORT VESSELS SEIZED

TOKYO, July 22.—Nippon Denpo news agency dispatches from Harbin stated that two Chinese vessels were seized by Soviet warships in the lower Amur river and that crews and cargoes were being held.

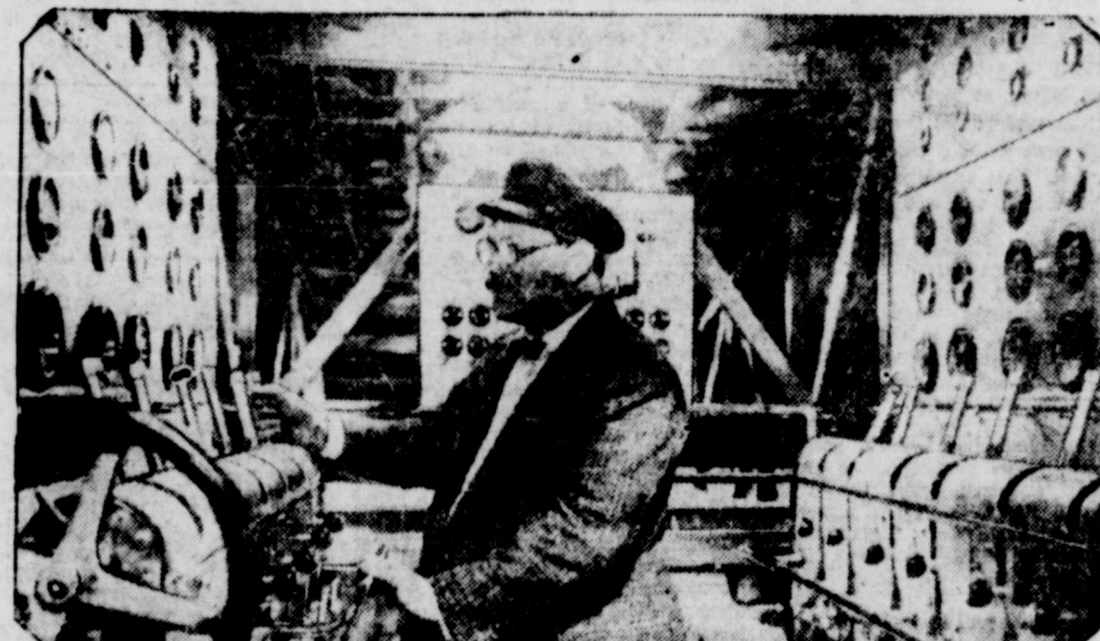

CLAIMS SELF DEFENSE

CHANGHAI, July 22.—Simultaneously with reports from Manchuria that Soviet troops had fired into Chinese territory and that five Russian bombing planes had overflown Chinese troops concentrated at the frontier, the Nanking government issued a manifesto to the powers of the world claiming self-defense in its action against the Soviet union and requesting its intention to live up to the spirit of the Kellogg pact.

AT CONTROLS OF THE 100-PASSENGER PLANE

The pilots may fly it, but the chief engineer has a lot to think about on the new 100-passenger German seaplane that has been successfully tested in flights over Lake Constance, Switzerland—and if you don't believe it, look at this. The control room on the great 12-motored plane is pictured here, and it looks like the chief engineer has a right busy time with the multitude of wheels, gears, indicators and levers. Observe the sturdy steel construction of the big plane's interior.

The SHINING TALENT

By ELEANOR EARLY

© 1929 By NEA Service Inc.

THIS HAS HAPPENED
MOLLY BURNHAM, collegiate student, is trying her wings. The Molly graduated from college inheriting $10,000. And a few days later her sweetheart, JACK L.S., left Boston to work in New York.

Molly comes from a little town in Wisconsin. Her parents were expecting her to return to them, immediately upon graduation. They expected to announce Molly's engagement, and had told them all about it.

But Molly, when she receives word of her inheritance, resolves to return to Snodgrass, but to sweet freedom and independence. Her mother writes, advising her to emulate the virtues of Aunt Minnie, who left her the tidy little fortune that Molly is in the parlance of her town, "fed up" on Snodgrass, the virtues of Aunt Minnie. A very thought of tea and her makes her blood run cold, all Jack.

So discouraged by her heart and her parents—she is to live her own life, and not expression for her settling. She gets work on a newspaper and becomes, very shortly, a writer. Her biggest thrill is when she is assigned to a murder trial.

liked to steal an hour or so, she was obliged to waste that amount of time every day. To ease her conscience, she devoted her time to observant little strolls about the water front, or through the Public Gardens, and along the Common. And she wrote pithy paragraphs about people and circumstances that seemed unusual or interesting to her. At the end of the week, she submitted several sheets of copy to the city editor.

"Good stuff," he approved. "I like your bit about the old man and the little lame girl. And this dog story's good. People like animal stories. Keep it up."

On the following Monday Molly was relieved of her Inquiring Reporter assignment, and given the joyous privilege of compiling a column of her own, "About Town," they called it, and it proved a popular feature.

And, before long, she was doing news stories. Stories with a human interest slant. A boxing match, from the woman's point of view. And then a wrestling match. She talked with ball players and their wives. And finally she interviewed theatrical stars.

It was great fun, sitting down front, on a press ticket, and meeting the press agent in the lobby, between acts, to be taken to the star's dressing room. It was always the nicest dressing room, and it usually had a star painted on the door. Usually the glamorous lady had a maid, and sometimes she had a secretary. Her maid frequently helped her dress while she chatted to Molly.

Molly loved theatrical interviews. But the biggest thrill of her life came on the day she was assigned to cover a murder trial.

CHAPTER IX

It was a celebrated trial, to which many out-of-town papers sent their star reporters. One New York paper had three men and a girl sister there. Even the society reporters showed up, which was most unusual, as society reporters are customarily wed to respectability. But then this was a most unusual trial.

The defendant was an artist, a "society artist," the paper called him, which meant that he had a very fashionable following. He was a handsome man, and the petted darling of many smart women.

Although Lionel Barrows seemed an esthetic type, he had engaged in a love affair that had, apparently, no esthetic side. The woman was beautiful and infamous. And now she was dead. Barrows was charged with her murder.

There had been a lengthy investigation, during which many men were questioned. For some time Barrows' name had been kept out of it. His aunt was a very wealthy dowager, and socially prominent. And he had friends among the most influential people in the city.

But the district attorney's office, it developed, had its eagle eye all the while on the slim, handsome artist. And one day Barrows, without so much as preliminary questioning, was placed summarily under arrest.

"How," asked the city editor one Saturday night, "How would you like, Miss Burnham, to cover a murder trial?"

"Don't kid me," she besought him. "That's cruelty to girls."

"But I mean it," he grinned.

artist's model, who lived and died in florid splendor in the most exclusive residential section of the city.

Bernice was not a good girl. But she had been a rarely beautiful one. Girlhood photographs, supplied by her heart-broken mother, proved that. She had been a slim, white thing, with a crimson mouth, and golden hair, and little twinkling hands.

Many men had vied for her charms sufficiently to pay bills that were many and varied. Bernice had driven an expensive car, and kept an expensive maid, had worn beautiful clothes, and lived in a costly apartment.

The medical examiner said he had never seen a woman so perfect in death. Her hair framed her white face like a cloud of golden glory, and she looked, in her coffin, more like a saint than a sinner.

But, for all her still and lovely look, Bernice Bradford had died a dreadful death. She had been poisoned.

Barrows' lawyers would contend it might have been suicide. Neither side was prepared to explain the mystery of the wedding gown that hung in Bernice's closet. The state would naturally declare that a woman anticipating marriage would hardly commit suicide. The defense, on the other hand, was ready to allege that the girl might have met her death at the hands of an unknown slayer—the man whom she expected to marry. Barrows, being married, would be eliminated from that assumption of the case.

Molly went to the reference room (the morgue, they called it, in newspaper parlance) and studied pictures of Bernice and the artist. The girl was lovely in a wild flower sort of way. Tempestuous, with daring eyes, and willful lips, and a mad smile.

Lionel Barrows had a narrow mouth, and a thin face. His forehead was high, and he wore his hair rather long, in the fashion of a poet. He had the wide eyes of a dreamer, and a beautiful Roman nose. It was impossible, Molly thought, to imagine him committing murder.

"After all," she reflected, "you never can tell."

And that night she made many observations in her notebook. A story was shaping itself in her mind. The story of a woman who died for love. In imagination Molly could create the woman. And the man worth dying for would be a man like Jack. She could fashion the characters, she knew. Perhaps the trial of Barrows would furnish the plot.

On Sunday, cleaning out her dressing table drawer, Molly came upon a little verse she had torn from a newspaper the day she was graduated from college. It was some time since she had seen it, and she read it aloud:

"A girl she had her hope and chance—
 But Fate was thwarted by a glance,
 A look that set her heart afire,
 So genius died, for warm desire."

Yet still the phantom visions glow,
 Although a world will never know
 The Shining Talent that was dead
 So soon as that bright soul was wed.

A dull and stodgy wife is she,
 And dark the flame that used to be,
 But always come to torture her
 The dreams of things that never were.

So this is the song of the wife—
 Ah, what have I done with my life?"

Later, as she was hurrying to the corner for a jar of cream for coffee, she met a messenger with a special delivery for her. Jack put a special stamp on his Saturday letters, so she might always hear from him on Sundays. There were some boys coming out from the office for Welsh rabbit that night, and Molly thrust the letter in her bag. She would open it later. It was so nice to read Jack's letters leisurely. He wrote the sweetest letters in the world, she thought.

Conversation that evening revolved about the Barrows trial.

The crowd congratulated Molly so warmly that she began to feel as if she had already arrived.

"Atta girl," approved Slim Boynton. "You're the best darn newspaper woman in the city, and I'll bet you haven't cut your wisdom teeth yet. Don't go and get married now, Molly, and cramp your style."

Red Flynn elaborated. "Say, we had a kid in the office once—wonderful little kid. What a future that kid might had had! And what do you think she did? Went and married a filling clerk! Nobody's heard a peep out of her since."

Molly laughed. "Look, boys!" she cried, and showed them the little torn clipping. "This is my battle cry. My hymn of freedom."

"Well, I'll be darned!" Slim gave a long, amazed whistle. "Who do you suppose wrote that thing? Helen White - Her-Name - you know—the girl that married Roger Wells. She was on the old record. Smart kid, too. She meant to go on with her writing after she was married. She and Roger were going to collaborate on a novel. Ambitious girl—Helen."

"I hadn't seen her for years, until one day I bumped into Roger in the subway. He's editor now of some jerk sheet. And he dragged me out for dinner. Helen was a good deal of a wreck. Said she'd been sick. She looked about 10 years older than Roger. Thin as a rail. They'd had a few kids. Cute little things, with red hair. After dinner, Roger had to go down to the office, and Helen gave me an ear full. A regular spiel about dead ambition, thwarted dreams, and all that. She showed me that verse. Said she'd written right out of her bleeding heart."

Red nodded sympathetically. "Marriage raises the devil with some women. Better watch your step, Molly."

"Oh, I intend to," she assured them.

And after they had gone, she opened Jack's letter. He had had a raise... "And, oh Molly darling, I want you so, little girl. I wonder if marriage means as much to you as it does to me. I wonder if you long for me as I long for you. Tell me, Sweetheart, do you dream day and night of that wonderful time...?"

The letter dropped to Molly's lap, and a line from Helen Wells' verse sang itself in her mind... "So genius died for warm desire." And then another, and another:

"A dull and stodgy wife is she,
 And dark the flame that used to be."

In the morning Molly went to court for the first time in her life. She saw Lionel Barrows, and his feminine admirers, flocking like movie fans. And his wife, with tear-rimmed eyes, and a cynical, painted mouth. And she saw the lavender silk nightgown in which Bernice Bradford died, which was subsequently to be exhibit No. 1.

Molly shivered with excitement, and drawing a pile of copy paper across the press table, began writing rapidly. Three hours later her story led the paper in the third edition. And Molly's reputation as a newspaper woman was assured.

Fifth Annual Ranchman's Roundup To Feature Discussions of Cattle, Sheep, and Goat Industry Problems

COLLEGE STATION, July 22.—Discussion of problems of the cattle, sheep and goat industries by outstanding specialists and ranchmen, exhibits of registered fine wool sheep and Angoria goats with judging contests for boys, special group sessions of interest to women and barbecue spreads with the real flavor of the old west are some of the features on the program of the fifth annual Ranchman's Roundup to be held at the ranch experiment station, 30 miles south of Sonora, August 6-7, program for the roundup just announced. Numerous prominent figures in the livestock industry and in livestock research work are scheduled to deliver addresses during the two-day gathering which is sponsored annually by the Experiment Station, A. & M. college of Texas. General sessions will be held both morning and afternoon Aug. 6 and during the morning Aug. 7. Barbecue lunch furnished by the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers association will be served at noon each day. Special programs for the women will be held the afternoon of Aug. 6 and the morning of Aug. 7 when prominent specialists will discuss subjects of particular interest to the wives of the ranchmen. Sheep and goat judging contests for boys are scheduled for the afternoon of Aug. 6 with G. W. Barnes, beef cattle specialist of the extension service, in charge. Prizes totaling $30 will be awarded winners in each contest. The prizes in goat judging, donated by the American Angoria Goat Breeders association, will be presented by Fred Earwood, president of the association, while T. A. Kincaid, Jr., will present the prizes in sheep judging, donated by the Texas Rambouillet Sheep Raisers association. Music, furnished through the courtesy of Claude Wild, secretary of the board of city development of San Angelo, will be a feature of the gathering. Band concerts will be given after the noon barbecue and at the close of the speaking program August 6. Camp sites, with plenty of water and shade, will be available for visitors who have been urged to come prepared for camping. Committee of the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers association, cooperating with the experiment station in providing entertainment, includes: Tom Bond, Sonora; S. S. Bundy, Roosevelt; and Horace Fawcett, Del Rio. W. H. Dameron, superintendent of the Ranch Experiment station, will preside at the general meetings of the men while Dr. Jessie Whitacre, division of rural home research, experiment station, will preside at the sessions of women. Among the speakers for the general sessions are: Congressman Claude Hudspeth, El Paso; Henry T. Fletcher, manager Ranch 62, Alpine; director O. B. Martin, ex-

Salmon Fails To Make Turn

SEATTLE, Wash., July 22.—They don't have any signs "dangerous curves ahead" in the rivers of the northwest—nor do they have traffic cops. Hence this fish story, which, by the way, may be true. With a "bone in his teeth," fins making 90 revolutions per minute, full canvas and throttle wide open, old King Salmon was going places up the Duwamish river. His speed was 40 miles an hour or thereabouts. Fred W. Newell, Jr., saw the terrible commotion in the looks at the white foam and saw the fish. Came a curve. Out went a fin for a signal—but the river wasn't banked for that kind of navigation. Salmon couldn't make the turn and piled up on the beach. Newell picked up the fish, photographed it and took an oath his story was true.
