COMMITTEE WILL MEET ON MONDAY

Saturday Midnight Ends Period for County Filing

The democratic executive committee for Eastland county will meet in the county courtroom at Eastland Monday morning for the purpose of arranging the ballot for the coming democratic primary, ascertaining the amount each candidate, whose name appears on the ticket, is to be assessed to defray the expense of printing the tickets, etc., and to transact such other business as comes before it.

Only in a few instances is there just one candidate for an office. W. P. Leslie, associate justice of the eleven court of civil appeals, is unopposed for re-election. County Judge C. L. Garrett, District Clerk W. H. McDonald and County Attorney Joe H. Jones, have no opponents. They are serving their first terms.

Four Candidates

The county superintendent's race has attracted four candidates. The elective term for this office is now four years instead of two, which makes it more attractive than in former years.

It is almost certain that Eastland county will hold the second primary this year. This is a matter left entirely with the county executive that he had had no expression from the other members of the executive committee, but he was sure, that since the governors' race and possibly other state races, are virtually certain to have to be run off between the two highest candidates in the July 26 primary, making it necessary to have a county run-off, that the committee would order two elections held in the county.

DETROIT LEADS LOS ANGELES.

DETROIT leads Los Angeles in 1930 population. This is the figure: 1,564,397, an increase of 570,719, or 37 per cent over 1920. Los Angeles made a greater percentage gain in the 10 years, but Henry Ford's town made a great gain and left Los Angeles behind in the race, notwithstanding that Los Angeles made a larger percentage in the period of 1920-1930. Los Angeles has a population, according to the count, of 1,231,736, or a gain of more than a million in 10 years. This will hold Col. Arthur Brisbane for a while. After he has caught his breath, he will be on the road again.

EDISON BACKS HOOVER FOR SECOND TERM.

Thomas A. Edison, at 81, is a very busy man. He is going to New York to urge President Hoover to seek election for a second term. His verdict is government is the worst managed business in the United States. He considers mergers are sound up to the point where the vast size of the business tends to mismanagement. Speaking of rubber, he says they are selling crude rubber below the cost of production. Let us forget, he reminds the American reader that labor in the rubber countries gets only 30 cents a day. As to American rubber, golden rod is still the best provider, it is growing fine and making more rubber every day. Now Henry Ford will second the proposal to name Herbert Hoover for a second term.

OKLAHOMA WHEAT CROP BELOW NORMAL.

Condition of wheat in Oklahoma was 59 per cent of normal on June 1, indicating a production of 31,923,000 bushels, compared with 44,633,000 bushels harvested in 1929. A lean crop of American wheat may force fancy prices. A bumper crop will furnish the growers lean pocket books. There are 39 wheat growing countries and the European price is the price paid for American wheat. Price fixing on this side appears to be out of the question for the reason that it is the surplus that fixes the price and the surplus must be sold to foreign buyers.

BROOKHART BLOCKS MACNIDER CONFIRMATION.

President Hoover sent to the senate the nomination of Hanford MacNider of Iowa as minister to Canada. Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa wrote the senate foreign relations committee that MacNider, who is the Iowa republican leader, was "personally offensive" to him. Then the committee put the nomination before the senate without a recommendation, and now little hope is held out that a vote will be taken on MacNider before adjournment. Col. MacNider is a World War veteran. He was a gallant soldier on the other side. He is widely known the nation over. He has served in high place. He is perhaps the most brilliant and outstanding of the young leaders of his party. It must be an awful calamity for a personage to be "personally offensive" to Brookhart. A recess appointment will be given MacNider. He will laugh last.

PIPING TEXAS GAS TO CHICAGO.

Formation of two new companies to construct and operate the projected $100,000,000 Texas-Chicago natural gas pipeline was announced

There's a Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder!

June 11 in Wall Street. Two Delaware corporations will construct the high pressure line.

It is announced the pipe line will have an initial daily delivery capacity of 300,000,000 cubic feet of gas and will serve more than 50 cities and communities in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Construction offices have been opened in Missouri but not in Texas. Texas furnishes the gas and that's all. Texas pours its oil wealth into New York and Pennsylvania and its gas wealth into the Middle West and the Northwest and later along it will be easy to extend the pipeline from Chicago to Canadian cities.

What will happen to the Texas consumer when the natural gas wells go dry?

HOW MILLIONS OF TINY WORKERS HELP THE FARMER WITH HIS SOIL

Bacteria in Organized Underground Social System Form Wrecking and Building Crews

By HELMAN ROSENTHAL, M. A. Director, Dallas Laboratories.

If we had microscopic eyes we might see a world of marvels in the soil that our plows turn over before planting time. And if we knew exactly where to look along it would discover a well organized social system of life, perhaps far more orderly than the lives we humans live above the soil.

In the naturally cultivated existence of the tiny members of the soil world we find that plants live, each on the generations that have lived before, plus what the plant adds itself from the air and sunshine. Nothing goes to waste in the soil world. Its inhabitants are too practical minded.

As soon as a leaf or tree trunk falls to the ground, it is taken in charge by a wrecking crew composed of tiny organisms who go to their work with a will and break up the tree into its component parts so that they can be used for new construction.

The process is called "rotting" and the product, the black gummy stuff of a fertile soil, the building material for the next edifice that the workers wish is called "humus." These little workers, called bacteria, can break up big complicated molecules into their component parts and reduce them to ammonia-like compounds.

The second set of bacteria change the ammonia over to nitrates and then a third set, the amalgamated union of nitrate workers, we might call them, steps in and completes the process of oxidation with an efficiency that humans should envy, for ninety-six per cent of the ammonia of the soil is converted into nitrates.

But if conditions are not right, if the food is insufficient or unwholesome or if the air that circulates is contaminated with poison gases, the bacteria go on a strike.

The farmer, often not knowing what his workers are striking for, runs in strike breakers. He goes to some firm and buys nitrogen-fixing bacteria and puts them to work. But if living conditions remain in bad the new comers will soon quit work, too, and the farmer loses his money. If he is wise then, he will remedy the conditions, putting a better ventilation system in his soil, perhaps, or neutralizing the sourness by means of lime or killing off the ameboid banditti that prey upon the peaceful workers engaged in the nitrogen industry. It is not an easy job that the farmer has in keeping billions of subterranean servants contented and working together, but if he does not succeed at this he wastes his seed and labor.

Pipeline to Austin Being Planned

AUSTIN, June 14.—Plans to construct a 300 mile pipe line from the Reagan county oil fields of the University of Texas to Austin to supply state institutions with fuel were outlined to the state board of control yesterday by Robert L. Holloway of El Paso and J. H. Walker of the university land leasing board.

State institutions spend about $100,000 a year for fuel which might be supplied by the pipe line. Sale of fuel at intermediate places would help pay the construction cost.

Says Betsy Ross Story of the First Flag Is Legend

NEW YORK, June 14. — The story of Betsy Ross and the first American flag—a story which has thrilled this country's school children for decades—was described today as "just a pretty little legend."

"There is no more truth in it," said Col. James A. Moss, president of the United States Flag association, "then there is in the George Washington cherry tree episode. Betsy Ross did not help design the first flag, nor did she sew it with her own hands."

The legend—to use Colonel Moss' term—is that Betsy Ross, an attractive young widow of Philadelphia who made flags for a living, was called into conference by George Washington, Robert Morris and Gen. George Ross, her uncle, while they were considering a new flag for America, and that together they designed the stars and stripes on June 14, 1777, with Betsy making the first one herself.

The records show, said Colonel Moss, "that Washington was not in Philadelphia during the whole month of June. No one will ever know what is the true story of the origin of the American flag, or who first made it."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON CALVARY.

Text, Matt. 27:33-50

And when they were come unto a place called Gogotha, that is to say, a place of a skull.

They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall; and when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink. And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.

And sitting down they watched him there. And set up over his head his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

Then there were two thieves crucified with him; one on the right hand, and another on the left.

And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads. And saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.

Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said,

He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross and we will believe him.

He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him; for he said, I am the Son of God.

The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.

Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour.

And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calteth for Elias.

And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink.

The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost.

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for June 15, Calvary, Matt. 27:33-50.

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D., Editor of the Congregationalist.

Calvary was the end of the way that reached its final stage in Gethsemane, though the shadow of the cross long before that had loomed over the pathway of our Lord.

How clearly Jesus in his earthly life knew from the beginning this end of the way is not made plain in the Scriptures. In fact, the writers of the New Testament may so easily have read into the records the things that they only understood after the death and resurrection of Jesus that we have no exact means of knowing just what was in the consciousness of Jesus or how vividly he realized what was to be the final sacrifice.

Expected His Martyrdom

That he understood the probable means of effecting his ministry would seem evident from the of struggle and trial throughout his earthly ministry and in the representation of those experiences in which only through agony and prayer did he seem to find strength.

The fact is that we must feel the humanity in Jesus all the way to the cross. If we lose our sense of the reality of that humanity, we miss the true meaning of his earthly ministry and sacrifice.

If the cross were not real for him, his bearing of it would have little reality for us. Probably in most of our thought and talk of the cross we very little sense its actuality. We could hardly speak of it so glibly and so dogmatically as we sometimes do if we truly felt its reality in terms of actual suffering.

Nor was the physical pain its greatest mark. The law of sacrifice and its mystery are perplexing. The disappointment of one's hopes and the turning back of life into channels of seeming loss and bitterness constitute the most difficult part of the cross. Yet human life in its revelations of sacrifice and martyrdom on behalf of truth and right reveals the fact that it is out of the darkest and saddest experience of mankind that have come the most glorious dawns.

The scene of Calvary portrayed in our lesson is vivid enough in its detail—the cross in the center of the group with the ironic inscription "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews," upon the cross to which he was nailed and the two thieves, one on either side—once railing against him with the mockery with which the base and brutal have always reviled the saint and the saintly, the other with that genuine goodness beneath his unfortunate career of evil, recognizing the justice of his own punishment and turning in his last hour to find communion with the Friend of Sinners and salvation through his grace.

Beyond Our Comprehension

No detail, however, can make one appreciate the full horror of the tragedy or the full glory of the light that came in the dawn following this darkness. It revolutionizes man's thoughts of himself and for the world when he comes face to face with Christ on the cross and realizes what Calvary meant in the experience of the Man of Sorrows and what it has meant in the economy of the universe.

To know Christ and to share the fellowship of his sufferings is to meet Christ with a new sense of courage and power and if not with an understanding of life's mystery, at least with a new faith that through the mystery there lies a path of honor and good-

To Pat, above, a young police dog, falls the important task of being President Hoover's watchdog. Pat has just been presented to the chief executive by Captain Charles J. Maibutt of Fort Benning Ga. self and for the world when he comes face to face with Christ on the cross and realizes what Calvary meant in the experience of the Man of Sorrows and what it has meant in the economy of the universe.

To know Christ and to share the fellowship of his sufferings is to meet Christ with a new sense of courage and power and if not with an understanding of life's mystery, at least with a new faith that through the mystery there lies a path of honor and goodness and truth from which the man who seeks salvation cannot be turned even by suffering or loss, and along which he finds the way to the deepest satisfaction and the highest communion of life.

Love's Strength in Counties Carried by Hoover Is Nominal, Says Paper's Survey

AUSTIN, June 14.—Hoovercrat voters do not want Thomas B. Love, democratic candidate for governor. This is the report of The San Antonio Express, based on a staff correspondent's survey of six principal counties five of which were carried by Herbert Hoover two years ago, when Love was the state Hoovercrat leader.

Except for Dallas, his home county, Senator Love will fall to make better than fifth place in the race in these Hoovercrat counties. The Express' survey concluded including Dallas county's vote for him, he was predicted in second place in the combined vote.

The canvass made by the San Antonio staff correspondent reflected a definite drift of the sentiment on the candidates for governor as leading away from Senator Love. The report predicted Love will not reach the second primary.

Love was put on the democratic ballot here last Monday over the protest of a large majority of the committee, when he announced his readiness to take the pledge of supporting party nominees, and announced to the committee he would not support certain of the nominees.

Love was a leader of the Hoovercrat movement in 1928.

The San Antonio Express said the survey indicated the standing of governor candidates in the six counties that had given Hoover a 30,000 majority, including Dallas, where Love is expected to poll heavier home-town strength, would be:

Sterling, first Love, second, Barry Miller, third, Ferguson, fourth, Mayfield, fifth, Small, sixth.

"Except for Love's strength in his home county of Dallas, it appears, from talks with business men and experienced politicians that Love's total strength in the Hoovercrat territory is less than that of five other candidates," the newspaper survey said.

The counties surveyed were: Dallas, Harris, Tarrant, Bexar, Taylor and Tom Green. Houston is the county seat of Harris county; Fort Worth of Tarrant; San Antonio of Bexar; Abilene of Taylor, and San Angelo of Tom Green county.

"The survey indicated," its report said, "that Love is not carry-

RADIO MAKES NEW DEMANDS UPON MODERN MUSIC

HARRIET LEE

New York City. — Radio has put a new task up to the singer, for the voice of the air must now produce mental pictures for an unseen audience.

So declares Harriet Lee, a new air personality. "The microphone will probably be responsible for the truest type of song interpretation that the listening public will ever know," she says.

"To reach his audience of millions, the singer must have a very definite picture of the story he is giving. He must make himself feel everything he sings.

"I would say that this new technique demands more of drama than any that has gone before. Indirectly it will be responsible for raising the standard of the songs in America. A few years ago we were content with any sort of da da da oop de ump that could be hummed with a bang. In fact the more dribbish the lyric, the more the public seemed to like it. But now every lyric must tell a story and paint a picture.

"This is a good thing for writers, as demand is raising the standards of what they can sell.

"You're Always In My Arms," from Rio Rita, is a very fine example of a song which tells a simple story full of pictures.

"You're always in my arms. But only in my dreams. We're always 'neath the palms. So happy then it seems. So near and yet so far apart. A love story simply told.

"Until now, our music had gotten far ahead of the words in our national songs."

No G. O. P. Candidate Filed in Harris

Miller will not have authority to accept candidates' names, and none has applied so far.

Trinity River Reclamation Project at Dallas Exemplifies Southwest Spirit

DALLAS, June 14.—The same unbridled civic spirit which is driving the great southwest to industrial and agricultural prominence is exemplified in the Trinity river reclamation project here. Despite the immensity of the undertaking and the amount of money involved—which is roughly twenty millions of dollars—the citizens of the city and county of Dallas in conjunction with the public utility companies, are rapidly bringing the project to completion. At the present writing eighty percent of the work has been accomplished and the various contractors are far ahead of their schedules. In addition to supplying work for more than 2,000 men and creating nation-wide interest in the southwest, the project is definitely proving to the country that "the southwest refuses to stand still."

Every great enterprise must have inspiration to support it. Such inspiration, in this instance, is supplied by Houston which brought to its very doors one of the most magnificent harbors in the country. The vigorous spirit of Houston is characterized by its phenomenal growth and Dallas joins with the rest of the southwest in acclaiming it as a city worthy of admiration. The growth of Houston, San Antonio, Amarillo, El Paso, Abilene, Ft. Worth and Wichita Falls, in addition to hundreds of other cities in the southwest is causing Wall Street financiers to say, "Don't sell the Southwest short!"

Observers predict that the southwest will be next section to occupy the industrial spotlight. These observers point to Houston and its relation to Central America; El Paso and its relation to Mexico; Dallas and Fort Worth in relation to the rapidly growing North Texas market, and the ultimate navigation of the Trinity river, tied up with the Intercoastal canal system.

A New York banker recently said, "Go to Texas, you young men who want to find a land of opportunity—a land of vast natural resources, peopled by citizens who know how to work—and who will work. Texas is the modern industrial Eden; the last frontier of industry. The congested centers of the East are beginning to disgorge thousands of workers and these workers are going southwestward. If I were a young man I would paraphrase Horace Greeley's advice and say, Go southwest, young man! It is needless to waiving its rules penalizing boxers for fouls be paid prorata for the number of rounds fought, but agreed that Sharkey and Schmeling should be paid their full purses regardless of how the bout ended.

Under the pay-by-round plan pursued for the four rounds against Schmeling would have been $47,444 instead of the $177,917 which he will collect.

Schmeling has gained many supporters since the fight, with numerous fans and experts who saw the bout coming around to the opinion that Sharkey had "shot his bolt" and that Schmeling might have stayed to win the bout if he had not been fouled.

Max himself declared that he fought the bout as he planned and that Sharkey lost courage in the fourth round after finding that he could not win by a knockout.

Sharkey backers continue to believe that the Bostonian would have been a certain winner—probably by a knockout for the accidental foul.

NEW YORK, June 14.—Sam Rice, Washington's 39-year-old outfielder star, and Chuck Klein, Philadelphia's 24-year-old home run king, head the sluggers in their respective leagues, United Press averages showed today. The averages includes games played Thursday, June 12.

Klein set a fast pace during the past week to displace Babe Herman of Brooklyn as the National league leader, with an average of .415. Herman held second place with a .411 mark, being followed by Terry, Giants; Heilmann, Reds; and Hogan, Giants, who were tied at .396.

Rice dropped below .400 for the first time this season, but topped the American league at .396. Al Simmons of the Athletics held second place with a .389 figure, followed in order by Ruth, Yankees, .376; Hodapp, Indians, .369; and Cochrane, Athletics .367.

DANCING JUDITH

BY CORALIE STANTON and HEATH HOSKEN
COPYRIGHT 1930 BY CHELSEA HOUSE

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Vincent Stornaway, successful portrait painter, takes Bruce Gideon, wealthy financier, to the picturesque Cafe Turc in New York's Greenwich Village, to give him a glimpse of the bohemian life of the world of artists. There he introduces him to Judith Grant, artist's model, chorus girl and the favorite of the Cafe Turc, and her friend, Clarissa Morley, who is known as Chummy, and tells him of Chummy's tragic history. Seven years ago she had loved Alan Steyne, an artist. Steyne deserted her abruptly, and the shock unhinged her mind, so that she has been childish in her mental processes ever since. She lives with Judith, who looks after her and supports her. After the two men leave the cafe, Bastien Dumont, another artist, tells Judith that Steyne has come back to New York, and tries to arrange a meeting between Steyne and Chummy. Judith, however, finds that Chummy does not even remember Steyne's name, still, she arranges for a meeting in the attic apartment she and Chummy share together.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER II
At nine o'clock Judy had everything ready. Chummy sat in her chair like a lovely doll. Judy had made the room as clean as she could. There were two bright-colored shawls pinned on the drapery walls. She had recklessly invested in eight yellow jonquils, which brought sunshine into the dingy place. The kettle was singing on the fire.

Listening with all her ears, Judy caught light, hurried footsteps on the stairs. She went out on the landing.

The great moment had arrived. Judy's face was white in the light of a naked gas jet. She wore a little black frock, very short in the skirt and sleeves, and low in the neck, showing that lovely, innocent curve of throat and shoulder that artists raved about. A string of red beads hung about her waist. Her thin stockings consisted chiefly of darns, and the cheap, exaggerated shoes could not disguise her perfect feet.

Footsteps sounded on the stairs. It seemed to her that they lagged. Dumont appeared first, his companion half a flight behind him. Judy devoured his appearance with her bright, excited eyes. This was Chummy's young man. How often she had wondered what he looked like! How often she had wondered at the fidelity of a heart that could be plunged into darkness by the disappointment of any man on earth!

Her mind was too feverish to grasp details. She got an impression of a tall figure and a handsome face, which struck her particularly with its supreme fitness. Alan Steyne looked strong and energetic enough to jump over the moon, she thought. His eyes held hers with a laugh in them—and something else. He was fair, and his face was very tanned. He looked as if he always got what he wanted. Those were Judy's first impressions.

He addressed her in a voice whose naturally careless ring was contradicted by the anxious look in his eyes.

"Miss Grant, do you really think it is wise for me to see Miss Morley tonight? Dumont has told me everything. I am awfully sorry, but—I mean, oughtn't she to be prepared?"

He broke off, looking at her helplessly. Judy shook her head, and the mop of red-gold hair glittered like a bright waterfall.

"It's no good preparing her," she answered quickly. "I've tried and tried. Oh, Mr. Steyne, when she sees you, that'll do the trick all right! Dear old Chummy, I just can't bear it! Will you go in alone?"

He looked frightened.

"Oh, no—please come too. You know, she may not—"

"Judy!" came Chummy's voice from inside the room. "Where are you? Why are you such a long time? I'm cold."

Judy went to the half-open door, beckoning to the men to follow her. She saw Alan Steyne close his lips tightly and square his shoulders.

Inside the room Chummy sat in the chair by the small fire. It was the only chair fit for anybody to sit in. She had a pale-blue woolen shawl around her shoulders, and it set off her fair loveliness so that she looked like an angel on an old-fashioned Christmas card.

"Here is—some one to see you, Chummy, dear," said Judy in a choked voice.

Alan Steyne stood in front of the girl who had lost her wits for love of him. He stood there, awkward and ill at ease, with deep concern in his eyes.

Clarissa Morley smiled up blankly into his face. Then she blew her nose.

After that there was a dreadful pause.

"Say something—speak to her!" commanded Judy in a tense whisper.

"Clarissa!" said Alan Steyne. "Clarissa, don't you know me? I have come back!"

Chummy smiled again. Her eyes dwelt with complacent vacancy on his face—the face that once was all the world to her.

"Handsome boy!" she said sweetly. "I like you. Very handsome boy!"

The three looked at each other. "What are we to do?" asked Judy's purple eyes.

"What are we to do?" asked Bastien Dumont's black eyes. There was nothing to do. Chummy did not know her lover. To her he was only a handsome boy—one of the many she met and talked to and smiled at every day. Chummy loved men and boys; she always said so with her sweet complacency.

There was silence. Alan Steyne's hand breathing could be heard.

"Chummy went on smiling, and blew her nose again.

"He's a very handsome boy," she said. "And I like him, but I don't know him, Judy." She looked at the young man and asked inconsequently: "Is it cold out? Won't you come to the fire and have some beef tea?"

Alan Steyne advanced, and Judy pointed to a broken-down basket chair, into which he carefully lowered himself.

"Yes, it is cold," he said. He had one of the nicest voices Judy had ever heard.

"I should love some beef tea. But are you sure you don't remember me, Clarissa? I am Alan. Don't you remember, at the Cafe Turc every night? What fun those days were! I was nearly starving—and you painted so beautifully! And we used to walk in Central Park. Surely you must remember, Clarissa?"

Not a trace of enlightenment came into Chummy's face.

"Did you come to the cafe long ago?" she asked. "I dare say. I knew such lots of boys and men at the cafe; but I don't know you, I like you. Tell me about yourself while Judy makes the beef tea. Judy, make the beef tea at once!"

Judy went out of the room to fetch cups from a cupboard in her box of an attic. She looked at Dumont as she passed him. Her eyes spoke plainly:

"He can't make love to her while we're there."

Dumont followed her. Chummy and her lover were alone.

They were an unconscionable time fetching the cup and the biscuits. When they came back, Steyne had moved nearer to Chummy, and she was looking more like an angel than ever.

"I like this boy," she said, laughing with a purring sound. "We are going to be great friends."

They drank beef tea and ate biscuits, and smoked and laughed, and nobody would have known that Judy had not enough money in her purse to buy their food on the morrow. It was ten o'clock before Steyne took his leave. Dumont smiled radiantly at Alan, and asked him to come again. The other three felt very queer, as if they had spent an hour in an unreal land. Judy dismissed the men with a joke; but she felt very flat and tame as she went back to Chummy.

About ten minutes later Chummy was in bed and asleep, with her flaxen plaits lying like silvery cables on the pillow. Judy shut the door softly and went out upon the landing on her way to her own room. Light, firm footsteps on the stair made her pause, and Steyne ran up, slightly breathless. With one hand he took off his hat, with the other he drew something from his overcoat pocket.

"I say," he said very rapidly. "I do hope you won't mind, Miss Grant—I mean my coming back; but I wanted—well, Dumont told me about poor Miss Morley, you know—about her condition, and what an angel you've been to her. Of course it isn't fair, and as an old friend of hers I want you to take this—for her, you know, to get her things she wants—nice things to eat, and clothes, and all that. Please do say you're not offended!"

He held out some bank notes. Judy flushed crimson. She was a regular little Lucifer in her pride, but for Chummy's sake she answered with a spasm of gratitude, clutching at the notes and holding them as if they burned her.

"I mustn't say no, of course. I'm not offended. It's for Chummy, and seeing that you're going to marry her it's only right. Of course, I know it's been rotten for her here. She's not like me or like lots of our little crowd—she's a lady, and all that. I suppose you'll want to take her away at once and put her in some nice place until you're married."

Steyne murmured something more about her goodness to her friend.

"I've done nothing more than any of us would do," Judy answered warmly. "We all love Chummy. We're all Chummy's friends—every one of us."

"And you are her guardian angel, Miss Grant."

"Oh, Lord, no!" said Judy in her queer, hoarse voice. "You may call me her guardian, if you like, but there's precious little of the angel about me. Ask those that know me!"

The young man smiled and held out his hand. Judy looked a little abashed as she laid hers in it.

"Good night, little guardian," Alan said. "May we meet soon?"

Judy's hand lay snugly in his close, firm grip. It was only a moment, but it seemed a very, very long time before he released her and turned and went clattering down the stone stairs.

Wisconsin Board Refuses Correction

AUSTIN, June 14.—When Wisconsin manufacturers come to Texas this month trying to patch up the counter-boycot over their state's boycott of Rio Grande Valley land sales, they will find on record a surly refusal of the Detroit Better Business bureau to correct misinformation reports sent out on the basis of the Wisconsin action that already has been repudiated by the Wisconsin people.

Secretary Bernard of the Detroit bureau has returned to the Brownsville chamber of commerce a letter signed by A. W. Dunlap, acting U. S. secretary of agriculture, branding as untrue the statement that references to valley lands broadcast by the bureau had been made by government agents or representatives.

"We have previously related the fact, and are remotely interested in whether you believe it or what you say or think concerning it," the Detroit bureau official was quoted as telling the Brownsville chamber of commerce.

The letter from the United States department of agriculture, directly repudiating statements made in the Detroit bureau's circular attacking Rio Grande valley land values, said: "An investigation made shows that no such statement or information was made by any representative of the department of agriculture."

CHAPTER XLVIII
"Good Lord, man, do you realize what you are saying?" Alan appealed to Geoffrey.

He was certain now that the young man had been drinking. And Geoffrey always had been crazy about Natalie. He had seen her, listened to her wild tales and twisted them into a dramatic charge against Phillipa. It was preposterous, of course, but not to be quarreled over.

His question, and his suddenly easier attitude, perplexed Phillipa. A moment ago he had been on the point of succumbing to a towering rage; now, she said to herself, he was as meek as a lamb.

She had been suspicious and uncertain since he came into the room. Indefinite, vague, at first, her suspicions were now taking concrete form. Geoffrey had seen Natalie—she was here in New York. That meant that Alan might have seen her too. And he had certainly been acting very strangely.

Alan was startled when she cried, before Geoffrey had framed a suitable answer to his question: "Alan, have you seen Natalie?"

"Why, yes," he said. "I thought so," she flashed at him. "This is all a cooked up scheme to get me out of the picture!"

Both men stared at her in amazement, and both were silent. "A fair pair of men," she sneered at them. "You," she directed her attack toward Geoffrey, "you fixed it up in Alan's office, and then telephoned me. You found out they would like to make up, so you arranged this little surprise to accuse me so that I wouldn't be able to sue Alan for breach of promise!"

She whirled now upon Alan. "So that's why you told me you were going to adopt that Lamont brat! You thought I'd object and we'd quarrel about it. But that didn't work, so you try this. Oh, I see why you wouldn't leave—why you insisted upon staying here to make Mr. Norman apologize." She laughed crazily. "What a bluff!"

"Phillipa," "Don't 'Phillipa' me, Alan Converse. You're a worm, and you know it. Why didn't you break off with me long ago? You wanted to, you know you did, but you didn't have the courage."

"Yes, I did want to," Alan flung back at her, stung into forgetting Geoffrey's presence, "but it wasn't cowardice that stopped me. It was chivalry, if you want to know. Funny, isn't it, in this day and age? But you didn't take any particular pains to conceal the fact that you might have married Geoffrey and his millions. You let me know, too, that you were out with your family on my account. Well, I might be a fool, but I'm not exactly a cad."

He ended lamely, remembering that Geoffrey was a listener to what he had to say. He looked at his friend, somewhat abashed. "I don't think Phillipa tampered with the letter," he said. "You shouldn't believe it, Geof, if you love her. And she doesn't care a hang for me. I'm sure. She just felt sorry for me."

"You needn't try to throw me in his arms," Phillipa burst in, her face red with mortification. Geoffrey ignored her. "Sorry, but I have no intention of proposing to the young lady," he said icily, "and I'm sure not aware of ever having entertained any such idea."

"Oh, rub it in," Phillipa blazed, losing her respect for refinement, but saving enough of her self-control to make an effort to put a half-decent face on her conduct. "Yes, I let Alan believe I refused you," she went on "but don't think I encouraged you, Geoffrey Norman, because I wanted to marry you. Why, you're a bigger sap than Alan. I wouldn't have you. In love with a married woman, and too much of a rabbit to take her. Oh, I know. I've seen it—you're mad about Natalie Converse, and she's twisting you around her little finger, making you believe—"

"That's enough," Geoffrey cut in. "I know what to believe about Mrs. Converse."

Phillipa turned to Alan, her sudden laughter mounting hysterical. "You're a pair of fools," she informed him. "But you're a bigger fool than Geoffrey. He at least knows that two and two make four. You thought you were falling for a simple-minded little girl who hadn't a thought in her head but to sympathize with you. He had more sense than that!"

Alan looked at Geoffrey inquiraccused her of the crime Phillipa had committed.

Phillipa saw his mental turmoil in his face. Triumph rang in her laughter now, though she was growing calmer, as what might be the result of her rage occurred to her. But still she sneered. "Well, you know as well as I do that she'll never forgive you, don't you?"

Cool, quiet, yet vibrant as the tones of some fine instrument came an answer. "No, he does not know that, Miss West."

Geoffrey smiled, and stepped forward, and Alan went to meet her as though he were moved by spirit hands.

Geoffrey turned to Phillipa, who stood silenced under his forbidding frown. A moment, and Natalie spoke. "But my forgiveness is nothing without Alan's," she said, loud enough for all to hear. Then, for Alan's ears alone: "You do forgive me, dear?"

"Darling!" Phillipa could contain herself no longer. As she saw Natalie's arms go around Alan's neck and his gather her close to him to receive the rain of kisses he was plainly going to shower upon her, she flung herself about and said to Geoffrey: "Well, there's the woman you love!"

"Yes, thank God," Geoffrey breathed. "There she is. Shall I show you out, Miss West?"

CRACKS IN THE DOME

By POLITICAL ANALYST

AUSTIN, June 14.—Kapitol korridor comment: A city that wants to change its name.

That is Goose Creek, Harris county.

Why? Because its bonds don't bring as high a price with that name as its officials think they would bring with some other more sedate cognomen.

That is one reason. Another reason comes from a move said to be on foot by this city to consolidate with some other of the group which now form Goose Creek-Pelly-Baytown.

And a West Texas editor got into the well-known hot water for the kindly-meant suggestion that Muleshoe change its name to Roseborough. The answer was that one about a rose smelling just the same, etc.

Down in Zavala county there is a faint straight barren streak through the mesquite much of it washed into inconsequential gulches. That is a highway that was in use 122 years before the republic of Texas was born at San Jacinto. That highway was an established route 216 years ago, and recorded in the travel memories of St. Denis.

The same trail comes up through Central Texas. It branches from the present Post road near New Braunfels and goes through the historic city of Bastrop. It cuts the Austin-Houston road near Paige, and wanders through to Navasota and Crockett and finally to Nacogdoches. It is the oldest trail of the Southwest.

Over that trail this week Pat M. Neff, Dan Moody and R. S. Sterling headed a travel group, or at least along the highways proximate to it. The dim, slightly-marked, and partly-faded trail has been designated a state highway, and communities along it look forward to the day it will be a hard-surfaced main link in a trans-continental highway.

And nobody introducing the speakers of this motorcade failed to say "we have with us the past governor, the present governor and the future governor."

Except that R. S. Sterling is essentially unpolitical in his personal makeup that trip would have been made under stress and strain. There was Gov. Moody, while the foremost political question of the day remained, "Whom of the candidates for governor will be give his political support this year?"

But the question wasn't worrying Chum, Sterling—visibly at any rate. Each man said his little piece when the motorcade stopped for the numerous welcoming salutations of communities. And politics was no part of the message.

Chum, Sterling, of course, during the motorcade, told the people of cities and towns along the way that the counties should not have to put up the money for building state highways.

He told them the state ought to refund to the counties what has been spent by the counties, or contracted as debts in bond issues, for the state highways.

He reminded them less than 10 per cent of the travel on the highways was local travel.

But he would have done that had he not been candidate for governor. He has been carrying that message every since he became head of the highway commission.

And hungry-eyed observers along with the party had Gov. Moody's word for it and Mr. Sterling's word for it that the motorcade had not been made the agency for the two to talk over Mr. Sterling's natural desire to have the Moxley support in this year's race.

ORDER ON BALLOTS TO BE FIXED

DALLAS, June 14.—The order in which candidates for state and local offices will appear on the ballots of July 26 will be decided at meetings of democratic and republican county committees all over Texas, Monday, when the names will be certified for the primary. With 14 candidates for the democratic nomination for governor, the placing of the names on the ballot will be unusual importance to the office seekers in this primary, as the voters may be somewhat bewildered by the long list that will face them.

The order of the ballot is decided in each county by lot, and where one candidate may head the list in one county, he may be at the foot in another. In populous counties a place at or near the top is considered desirable, and all will depend on the luck of the draw.

Names of the candidates for state office as filed with the state democratic committee have been certified and went into the mails to the county chairman Friday. Names of certified republican candidates also have been forwarded to county chairmen.
