LD MAN NEGLEY stopped his | come home the first day and told you lawnmower to listen to a sound (or rather a series of sounds) that arose above its cheery whirr.

A man was bellowing wrathfully, somewhere on the far side of the fence which parted the Veller yard from the grounds of Colonel Prouse, on Vine street. Through his roars of anger cime now the sharp yelp of a dog in pain and fright.

Old Man Negley's gray brows puckered. He left his work and strode to the fence, peering over its top. There, on the grassplot, stood old Colonel Prouse, towering over a little dog that cowered quiveringly at his feet. "Lie down !" bawled the colonel, in a voice that would have traveled a half-mile.

The luckless puppy only cowered lower and turned his frightened head piteously from side to side in vain search for some way of escape. But he did not lie down. He was too dumb with terror to understand any meaning but fury in his dreaded master's tones.

Colonel Prouse drew back his foot and kicked viciously at the panic-smitten dog. The kick landed only glancingly. But the pup yelped again in fright.

"Excuse me, colonel," called Old Man Negley, aeross the fence, and trying to keep his voice reasonably civil. "Excuse me for mentioning it, but there are better ways for a man to show how inferior he is to his own dog than by kicking him. You'll know that when you cool down. Likewise, if you don't mind my saying so, a man who can't train his own temper can't hope to train a dog. The minute you loose control of yourself you lose control of your dog. I thought you might like to know. That pup of yours is too good to be spoiled forever, just for the fun of getting mad at him."

FEED COW'S MILK TO ORPHAN LAMBS

In feeding orphan lambs many think that cow's milk should be diluted with water, but since the analyses of ewe's milk shows it to be richer in fat than cow's milk this practice is entirely unnecessary. For the first week the orphan should have some ewe's milk, If possible. A good way to get it is to take the lamb to the ewes whose lambs are not yet old enough to take all the milk.

The orphan should be fed milk often, but it should not be given a large amount at one time until it is two or three weeks old.

Upon the first day of its life an ounce (two tablespoonfuls) is a liberal feeding and it is safer to feed only half that amount, but it should be fed at least every two hours.

It is most convenient to feed the milk from a bottle to which is attached a medium-sized nipple of the swan-bill type. The bottle should be kept thoroughly clean and the milk should be fresh and at a natural temperature; that is 100 degrees. In order to maintain the temperature, the bottle containing the milk should be kept in a vessel partly filled with water heated to 100 degrees or slightly above. After the lamb is two or three weeks old, it is not necessary to feed It more than two or three times a day. Sometimes an ewe has two lambs and only enough milk for one. In such a case it is usually possible to bring the tambs along nicely by supplementing her supply with cow's milk. As they learn to eat grain and hay, the milk feeding can be gradually diminished and finally discontinued.

"The pup's worthless !" fumed the colonel. "He's a born fool. I can't even kick sense into his useless carcass. He-"

"Didn't you tell me once, s'r, about training a regiment of raw recruits for the Spanish war?" respectfully asked the old man.

"Yep," said the colonel, "and they were the best-trained regiment of civillans at Chattanooga, if I do say so. But what's that got to do with-"

"With that poor cowed whimpering puppy?" supplemented Old Man Negley. "Only this much: Did you kick those recruits and scream and swear at them and threaten to kill them, the first time or two they were ever on the parade ground?"

The colone! glowered and said nothing.

"If you had," went on the old man. "You'd not only have been cashiered from the arr., but you'd have made that whole regiment as worthless as you're trying to make that pup.

"It would have been more sensible to kick the recruits and get into a babyish rage at them. Because they would have had sense enough to make allowances. Besides, there would have been some redress for them.

"But there isn't any redress for your dog. You're his god. You have power of life and death over him. You can torture him or scare him into fits. He can't save himself and nobody can save him. That's a pretty big responsibility, when you come to look at it in the right way, isn't it, sir?"

"The recruits were grown men, with grown men's brains. This puppy is only a baby. He has baby brains. He isn't a Daniel Webster. He is more anxious to learn things than you are anxious to teach them to him.

"Start him right and handle him right and there's almost nothing you couldn't teach him. But when you scare him half to death and kick him, his baby brains has only just room danger.

"That pretty little grandchild of yours, now-the one who started scared, change the lesson into a romp or else give him some tidbit to eat. Then, later, start the same lesson over again, always stopping when he gets confused.

"Go step by step. Take your time. In a very little while you'll find he's enjoying it and that he's learning as fast as you can teach him. It'll pay in the long run.

"If you'd like me to train that pup to do a few simple tricks and a few necessary things, I'll drop around tomorrow afternoon, when my work's done, and begin his education." The colonel was red and frowning. But presently he blurted:

"I suppose you're right. Maybe it is I who am the fool, and not the puppy. Come around. I'd-I'd like to watch you do it."

"Good !" approved Old Man Negley. "Tomorrow afternoon. Till then, don't try to make him do anything in the way of learning. Be gentle with him. Take him for a walk. Feed him bits of animal crackers. Make him forget he's so afraid of you: Maybe we'll be in time to save him from being cowed for good. There's nothing that's such a give-away to the rottenness of a man as his cowed dog. "Not that I believe in spoiling a dog or giving him his own way. All my dogs have to mind me, and mind me on the jump. But they can be taught to do it by love better than by boottoe."

Care of Little Pigs

At farrowing time the herdsman should be at his post, for it is then that he has the chance to save some of the young pigs, and in some cases the sow. When the pig is born it has some small needle teeth, or artificial tusks. Some of the best herdsmen make it a practice to remove these. After farrowing it is a good rule to feed a thin slop containing a double handful of ground feed the second day, and gradually increase this amount as the pigs are able to take the milk.

constipation was the cause of nearly all the children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which regulates the bowels. A single dose will establish natural, healthy bowel movement for weeks at a time, even if the child was chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it is often months before another dose is necessary. Making Cottage Cheese for Market-A Farm Woman, Mrs. W. W. Bond of Jackson, Tenn., Who Sells About $13 Worth a Week.

Most people like plain cottage whether made at home or cheese. bought. It is especially pleasing in summer and can be used in a great many ways. It is often eaten, either salted or unsalted, with sugar and cream or whole milk. Rich sweet cream is usually blended with it when it is to be served in this way, but sour cream or melted butter may be used instead.

Flavor Combines Well.

The flavor of cottage cheese combines well with a number of other flavors. Berries, peaches, or fresh fruits served with it are good; also canned fruits, dates, raisins, or other dried fruits, brown sugar, maple sugar, honey, jam, marmalade, or chopped The European combination of nuts. gervals or cream cheese with "bar-ledue" strawberries or currants can he closely duplicated by creamy cottage cheese and strawberry or currant preserves.

Broken nut meats, chopped pimentos, finely cut green peppers, diced cumake appetizing combinations, suggests the United States Department of Agriculture. Horseradish, onlon juice, parsley, and cottage cheese blend well in flavor. The dry cheese, when into buttered earthenware or enameled filling.

Home Canning Methods for Various Products

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture is frequently asked why the water bath method of processing may be used in the home canning of fruits and tomatoes, whereas nonacid vegetables must be processed under pres-

The explanation given is that for successful canning the temperature applied should ordinarily be the lowest possible that will insure a safe product. While no growing, or so-called vegetative, bacteria will survive for any length of time at the temperature of bolling water (212 F.), some bacteria are able to go into spore form. These spores are killed only by very long-continued heating at boiling temperature, especially if the fruit or vegetable being canned has juice that is alkaline or only very slightly acid. When the juices are acid, as in fruits and tomatoes, all forms of bacteria are killed more quickly at 212 degrees Fahrenheit, which is the highest temperature possible in the water bath. A water both canner is commonly understood to be any covered vessel of sufficient depth for the jars or cans to be completely immersed while processing, and equipped with a rack or false bottom which permits water to circulate around the jars or cans. A wash boiler frequently answers the purpose in the household. Corn, peas, beans, and other vegetables that do not have acid juice need to be processed under steam pressure at temperatures higher than 212 degrees Fahrenheit, and for this reason, the steam pressure canner is recommended for canning them.

(Prepared by the United States Department | dish, chilled and turned out on platter to be served in slices. Ground sage may be used for seasoning, if liked. When put up for sale cottage cheese may be packed in cylindrical boxes made of waxed cardboard.

> Especially Fine in Salads. Cottage cheese lends itself especially well to salads. If enough is used, the salad may be the main dish of the meal. French mayonnaise or boiled dressing go well with cheese salad. The cheese may be formed into balls or slices, molded in small cups, or passed through a pastry tube. A small quantity of finely ground leftover ham or corned beef may be mixed with cottage cheese, mustard used as seasoning, and the whole served on lettuce leaves with dressing. Other foods that combine well with cottage cheese in salads are crisp, fresh vegetables; cooked or canned vegetables; fresh canned dried or preserved fruits, nuts, olives, rice, potatoes. With the last two some highly flavored and bright garnish like beets, pimentos, or green peppers should be used; and celery, cucumbers, green peppers, crisp cumbers, or other crisp vegetables lettuce, or cabbage may be added to may also be mixed with the cheese to give succulence. Ground raw carrots and onions combine picely with cottage cheese.

Almost any of the foods that are used ordinarily with cottage cheese, either in serving in plain or in salad, made, should be seasoned well, packed can be combined with it for sandwich

Prudence's Daughter

NOT INTERESTED

SYNOPSIS-PART ONE-At . merry party in the studio apart-ment of Carter Blake, New York, Jerry (Geraldine) Harmer, Prudence's daughter, meets Duane Allerton, wealthy idler. He ad-mires her tremendously, and she likes him. But Allerton gets a bit exhilarated, with unfortunate bit exhilarated, with unfortunate results. Jerry, resenting his as-sumption of familiarity, leaves the party abruptly, the story turns to Jerry's childhood and youth at her home in Des Moines. Only child of a wealthy father, when she is twenty she feels the call of Art and asks her parents to let her go to New York for study. With some mis-giving, they agree to her going. In New York Jerry makes her home with a Mrs. Delaney ("Mtmi"), an actress, who, with Theresa, a painter, occupies the house. Jerry takes an immediate liking to Theresa, who is talliking to Theresa, who is tal-ented and eccentric and the two become fast friends. Jerry now devotes herself to Theresa, who returns her liking.

CHAPTER IV-Continued -6-

"Art Trailers! That is what I am, I suppose, an Art Trailer."

"Oh, no, Jerry, you're a student. If you want to amuse yourself studying Art-"

"It's nobody's business but my own," Jerry finished promptly, when Rhoda hesitated again.

"Righto !" Rhoda laughed, agreeing. Rhoda begged her to stay for dinner -promising to cook most delectable things on the grill, to take her out anywhere she liked, to go to the theater, generously profuse in her enticement. But Jerry would not be persuaded. She said she had to go home and fix something for Theresa, who was looking wretchedly ill, who had no proper regard for food, or rest, or exercise, and who certainly . required a strong coercive hand to force her into reason.

"Theresa's making heaps of money," Rhoda said surprisingly. "She's doing marvelously."

'Theresa !"

R.

"Yes, why not?"

"But-then-why-for heaven's sake, then, why doesn't she get a decent room, and eat a decent meal once in a while? I thought-'

"Well, you thought wrong. It Isn't the money with people like Theresalike all of us. It's that burning up inside-we can't help it. Don't try to know what I'm talking about, old Angel-face; the more you think about It the less you'll understand !"

It was the next morning when Jerry slipped softly upstairs with a breakfast tray that Theresa asked her diffidently, almost apologetically, if she would care to see a few of her "things."

"Oh, I should love to," Jerry cried, flushing with pleasure.

Theresa was vaguely surprised, a little troubled, at her eagerness. "If you wanted to see them, why didn't you ask me?"

"Oh, I couldn't ask, Theresa. I

riding the heavens could harness a | had overestimated the importance of fathomless ocean! I used to sit, like an ugly blackbird, on the highest rocks, and adore the ocean in a storm. A hundred times I went home drenched to the skin, soaked, but exalted with rapture, to be soundly whipped for my mischief, and put to bed in disgrace." She paused, smiling at Jerry.

"Go on, go on," she begged feverish-"Tell me." ly.

"First, I suppose it was just a personal emotion-I wanted to ride the waves. I chafed at my bondage to solid, sordid earth. I thrilled myself to a rapture by fancying myself swept high on the topmost wave. And so before long-my thought a mother to the thing, I suppose-it really seemed to me I saw her, the Ocean Rider, a lovely, slim, white woman triumphant on the waves. I worshiped it. It was a god to me. I have only been able to work on it when the passion is hot upon me, so it has been a very slow thing. A dozen times, in a storm, I have gone off to the Islands to do another bit on my Ocean Rider. It isn't right yet. The ocean is good enough. but the Rider-I haven't quite got it." There was brooding discontent in Theresa's voice. "The light in her eyes -it's not right. I wonder, Jerry-" Her voice took on a sudden wheedlesomeness Jerry had never heard in it before. "I wonder-would you mindwould you let me use your eyes? I have wanted a hundred times to ask you but-"

"Oh, Theresa, I shouldn't mind at all -I should love it. Why didn't you ask me before? But she looks so lovely to me the way she is. I'm afraid you will spoil her."

Theresa shook her head. "Not right. It's her eyes. I've known it all the time-that is, I've felt there vas something lacking. And when I saw you, I knew what it was. She must Mimi especially. I feel she is coming when she starts up the last flight of stairs, and I begin to see cross-eyed right away. You are the nicest kid." to sixes and sevens over nothing at all.

"Yes, I do. I had a little brother, but he died. I cannot remember him. Oh, I do wish you were my sister! Then I should be satisfied just to live on this way and take care of you and do little things for you. I should feel I was very important, indeed-you do paint such exquisite things, Theresa-I should be so proud of you. I'd probably take all the credit for everything you do, and brag about the way I brought you up."

Jerry-laughed gleefully at this picture of herself, but Theresa did not join her merriment.

"Funny thing, Jerry, but you are the first person in the world-the first woman-who ever wanted me for anything-friend, foe, or fellow citizen. I think I must be quite getting on in the world, to have somebody craving me for-anything. I feel quite stuck up about it."

She put her brushes down abruptly and went out of the room without apology, and Jerry, with that new wisdom of hers which was only intuition and not the least understanding, went on with the papers she was filing and paid no attention when she went, nor when she came again.

. . . . . Jerry, went about a great deal, sometimes with Mimi. She was not fond of Mimi, but enjoyed her immensely She was a constant source of gay delight, with her pretty vanities and boasted conquests, where Theresa was like a brooding pain to her. She laughed at Mimi, but in her heart she wept aloud over soul and body-worn Theresa.

Duane Allerton sent her flowers. Rhoda, in such a case, would have tossed them from her window in holy scorn. Theresa would have crushed them to crumpled petals between her bare hands, the thorns of them pric. ing her skin to crimson. Jerry looked at them, gave them to Mimi. He wrote to her. Jerry read the notes, and tore them up. She never thought of returning them to him, unopened, although she knew from whom they came. That would have been too dramatic, too theatrical, for her. The waste basket served her purpose well enough.

One afternoon she saw him. She was dancing at tea at the Biltmore with Mimi and two young friends of hers, boys fresh from college. One was cubbishly infatuated with Jerry, and she, in mischief, had set herself to tantalize him to the limit of her charm. In the midst of her pretty coquetry she looked up suddenly, and saw Duana Allorton at a table

Two Essentials of Sweet Clover

For Soil-Building Purposes It Supplies Organic Matter and Nitrogen.

When sweet clover is grown solely for soil-building purposes the question often arises as to when one should plow it under. As a fertilizer, sweet clover furnishes two essentials of a good soil-organic matter and nitro-The maximum amount of orgen. ganic matter is undoubtedly obtained from sweet clover the second year when it comes into bloom. Prof. C. J. Willard of the Ohio experiment station, however, says that the maximum amount of nitrogen is obtained about May 1, the second year after seeding. Between that date and the full-bloom stage much of the nitrogen in the roots is transferred to the tops without increasing the total amount in the crop.

Tests for Nitrogen.

"In one experiment," says Professor Willard, "we sowed the clover with the oats on April 6, 1922. The same fall after the oats were harvested we began analyzing the plants-roots and stems-for nitrogen. These tests were repeated throughout the following spring and summer. A study of the resulting figures shows that during the period of greatest top growth there is a rapid transfer of the nitrogen from the roots to the tops. The roots, therefore, serve as a storehouse for the nitrogen during the winter, emptying the nitrogen into the green tops in the early spring. By the first of May there is practically as much nitrogen in the plant as at any time during the second year's growth. 'To grow 100 bushels of corn requires about 150 pounds of nitrogen for grain and stover. Turning under a good stand of sweet clover during the month of April will add something like 175 pounds of nitrogen, or more than enough to supply this large corn yield." Tests Worth Remembering.

The above statements, based as they are upon carefully conducted tests, are worth remembering. It is not always convenient to postpone plowing under sweet clover till in the spring, but it should be done wherever possible, first, because, as the above shows, one gets about all the nitrogen possible at that time, and, second, also because one gets about all the organic matter that can be plowed under to advantage and be of use to the corn crop that same Third, when biennial sweet year. clover is plowed under after it has started to grow the second spring it will not bother as a weed. If plowed under in the fall after seeding in the spring it will come up as a weed the following spring.

Harvesting and Storing

Navy Beans for Winter Navy beans should be harvested and threshed as soon as ready and if infested with bugs they may be treated by one of several methods. Fumigation with carbon bisulphide, using the chemical at the rate of about one ounce to the bushel, is very satisfactory. This should be done in a tight container when the temperature is 75 | Harvest Soy Beans for flammable and fires of all kind should be kept away. Heating for an hour in an oven with the temperature from 125 to 130 degrees will also kill the insects. Seed can be safely stored by sifting one part of air-slaked lime with twice the quantity of seed.

Cleaning Machines

Table Shows High Degree of Purity Found.

The Vermont experiment station points out in a recent bulletin that a farmer might as well expect all-wool garments when he buys a cheap suit as high-class seed when he pays a chean price.

The certificates of seedsmen as to purity and germination are not exact, for that is an impossibility, but tests show that they usually come very close. to the percentage stated, sometimes a decimal under and often a decimal above the guaranty, but they are substantially correct and many states have laws to penalize any misstatements. The weed problem is ever present and some weed seeds, particularly in the fine seeds, cannot be entirely cleaned from the stock. If farmers knew weed seeds as well as they did grain seeds, they would take a look at cheap grade seeds and pass them by.

A reading glass would tell the tale readily if the farmer knew the weed seeds.

The cleaning processes of the big seed houses take out the largest percentage of weed seed and leave the seed comparatively clean, remarkably so compared with its original condition.

The following table shows to what a high degree of purity modern seed cleaning methods and machinery have achieved, as proved by a statement compiled after examination of samples from all over the country by the Vermont experiment station:

	Purity

arley	99.43
lsike clover	99.5
ted clover	99.72

Trimming Bull's Feet to Prevent Various Evils

Bulls kept in close quarters with little exercise frequently develop long hoofs. This condition is not only unsightly but may become painful, so much so that the bull cannot stand or walk squarely. Then, too, it brings. on various other foot troubles, such as foul foot and rot. The hoofs should be trimmed, or they will break off or disfigure the animal's feet. With young animals, this trimming often can be done with a long-handled chisel, while the animal is standing on a hard dirt or plank floor. The sole and the cleft between the claws cannot be gotten at in this way, however, and oftentimes these parts cause the most trouble. In that event it may be necessary to throw and tie the animal.

A pair of pincers, like those used in shoeing horses, comes in handy in clipping off the toe of the hoof, or it can be sawed off with a fine-tooth saw. A shoeing knife can be used to trim out the sole and dead boof, and then a rasp to smooth down the surface. The dewclaws, which often grow to great length, should also be trimmed off fair. ly close .- Farmers' Bulletin 1412.

thought perhaps you'd rather not show me-I was just hoping you would suggest it some time."

For the first time in the weeks she had known Theresa, she really took time to do a thing quietly, deliberately and with comfortable easiness. She spent the full morning with Jerry, showing her dozens of little sketches, unfinished bits of landscape, lovely heads, delicately draped figures without number, discussing them meanwhile with an Impersonal, judicious interest that charmed and fascinated Jerry. She touched upon their beauties of composition and execution generously, but without personal warmth. And she pointed out their defects with a keen eve and an unsparing tongue. And then she said :

"I have saved my best till the last, Jerry. This is my one passion, my darling and my adored."

It was typical of Theresa that she did not keep it on display, "her darling and adored," but packed away with tender care in a dark closet, obviously the one thing in her life that received her tender care. Jerry almost held her breath as Theresa brought it out, removed the protecting wrappers, and turned it about for her to see.

It was a cruel green ocean, lashing great waves into white foam, an ocean of blackening shadows, and shifting lights. At first glance, Jerry saw only the turbulence of a multitude of wa ters, and then, looking deeper, standing out with sharp incisiveness once she had discerned its presence, riding the highest, wildest wave of all, stretched the slim white body of a woman, triumphant white face upraised, dominant white arms flung wide-a joyous, jubilant, fearless figure of youth, swept on the black waters, sprayed with the white.

Jerry cried out, enraptured.

"Theresa! Oh, Theresa! It is beautiful! It is the most-thrilling-thing I ever saw. It makes you feel so full of-freedom."

Theresa nodded, her dark eyes alight with pleasure. "Um, freedom. I've been working on it for years, Jerry. A thousand or more, I think. I used to spend the summer on the coast in Maine with my nurse-when I was lentless-thing I ever saw. It knows what scientists say shout the moon.

have the light in her eyes that you had when you came first to the city, as you were when I saw you first. I shall never forget it-that sort of radiant assurance. Look! Her eyes are too deep, they are too subtle for a free woman."

Jerry flushed. "Theresa, that is trony! Eyes like mine for a free woman! Why, I don't know what freedom is. I haven't the nerve to find out when I have a chance. I am bound hand and foot-to conventions -to convictions-to Prudence."

don't find that blithe and buoyant confidence, that triumphant joyousness of surety, in freedom itself. Only in the pursuit of it. In eyes that have seen freedom"-she waved a light hand toward her Ocean Rider-"like this, subtle, understanding, inscrutable-"

"Perhaps-perhaps you mean license, Theresa, instead of freedom." Theresa smiled at her gentle diffidence. "Yes, I get the distinction. But unfortunately, Jerry, one must try both before one knows which is which! There's the pity of it. And the eyes are faithful registers, they record it all. So my brave little Ocean Rider has got to have-not eyes that have known freedom, but which hold a vision of it-unrealized."

That same afternoon, Jerry posed for the eyes of the Ocean Rider, who must know not freedom, but cherish a dream of it.

"I think I missed my calling after all," she said. "I should be a model. The other night I was a corpse for Rhoda, and now I'm a mermaid for you."

And she sat, sweetly patient, in a bright light, starry-eyed with delight through a couple of old boxes for her, that she could be of service, while Theresa worked passionately on the eyes that were not just right. And when she had finished, and declared a kid, you know. I adored the ocean. the result far exceeded her expecta-It is the only really free-really re- tions, she kissed Jerry impulsively, for the first time, not on the lips no law but its own. how. And nervous, she's frightfully nervous. Don't hold it against her. Can't I give you a cup of tea-"

"Oh, no, thanks. I feel I shouldn't pollute her atmosphere any longer than is absolutely necessary. Awfully good of you: thanks very much. He went downstairs at once, and let himself out into the narrow street. And Mimi knocked on Jerry's door, opening it herself without waiting for an answer.

"Jerry," she began plaintively, "you have hurt his feelings just terribly, poor boy-and so good-looking. Now, that's positively not nice."

"Go and cheer him up if you like," said Jerry. "He's easily comforted." "He wouldn't walt-I mean- You might at least have introduced me. The best-looking thing-"

Jerry learned afterward that he had gone to Rhoda for her address, and "Yes, that is what I mean. You two days later he went to her again, to ask her to intercede for him, to remonstrate with her disagreeable protegee from the Middle West. He asked Rhoda if Jerry was a flirt.

"A flirt?" echoed Rhoda vaguely. "Good heavens, I don't know. What is a flirt? They used to say in college that she was, but they meant it nicely, every one was crazy about her. That's Iowa, you know. A girl who is quite wickedly awful in the Middle West seems like an angel from heaven when she's transplanted to Greenwich. Don't ask me anything about her. I don't know. She's a lovely thing, and I think a lot of her."

It did not remotely occur to Jerry that she was unhappy. Instead, she felt that she was quite joyous, carefree. She took a great deal of pleasure in doing things for Theresa, making her comfortable-Theresa, who cared as little for comfort as a honey bee for snow. She scoured the market for tempting delicacies, and became very proficient in preparing them nicely on her little grill. One day Theresa asked if she would mind rummaging search of a particular bit of tinsel she partial rly needed for a costume. Jerry flushed with pleasure.

"Oh, will you let met May I go through the drawers, and everything, and fold things up-I'll be very quiet." Theresa laughed at her. "Go as far as you like," she said generously. "Funny thing about you, Jerry. You was celebrated for her courage as w never bother me. Most people may me is her tearning. -Chicage Journal, Mimi would have redoubled her attentions to the young admirer, to whet Allerton's interest, to stir his jealousy. Jerry could not do that, she did not even think of it. She yielded to the natural hush that swept over her at seeing him, and sat, a subdued an softened figure, with the others at the table. She knew his eyes remained steadily on her face. She knew ha marveled that she permitted the silly exaggeration of this ardent boy's devotion, and yet repulsed his own more tinished advances. Jerry herself did not know why she did.

Jerry may not be a flirt, but she is doing just the thing to attract Allerton-if he's in earnest. Is he?

Shoes of Olden Time

In the early days of American history when necessity was ofttimes the mother of invention for comfort, the knitting needles played a part in the shoe styles of our ancestors. During the severe weather even governors had to walk about in deep snows and warm footwear was necessary. In the old South church at Boston there is on display a pair of shoes worn by Governor Phillips. They are heavily lined with sheep's wool and covered with dark-brown yarn in stockinette stitch. The soles are of leather. Probably every bit of the yarn was made by hand by the busy wife who had to find time to keep her lord and master warmly clad in days when the servant question was as difficult as It is today. if not more so, and labor not a ques tion of pay, but scarcity of folk.

Anne de Rohan

Anne de Rohan, the daughter of Catherine de Parthenal, heiress to the house of Soubise, was born in 1562 and acquired, like her mother, a high reputation in the literary world. She would have been one of the great est poetesses of her age, but her de voted plety turned ner talent into another channel. She died, unmarried, in 1646. She was a Protestant and was celebroted for her courage as well

Birds Control Insects

in Garden and Orchard Set the birds up to housekeeping and they will work for you-that, in brief is the idea conveyed in a news letter from the United States Department of Agriculture. The letter cites the example of 2,000 nests supplied for birds on the Baron von Berlepsch estate in Germany and the escape of this estate from the leaf-roller when trees on other estates were defoliated. Evidently the birds kept the insects under control. Says the letter of the United States Department of Agriculture: "Experience has shown that those who have increased the number of birds on their property have had cause for satisfaction rather than regret."

Alfalfa Crop Improved by Cutting in the Fall

Alfalfa will stand the winter better and give larger yields of hay the next season, if it is cut in the fall in time to permit a growth of at least one foot high before winter sets in. This growth is necessary for the winter protection afforded and permits the storage of food reserves in the root system so that the next year's crop will start off vigorously and produce a maximum yield of hay. Experience of numerous farmers confirms the recommendation, and, taken with the experimental data, affords the basis for the soundest farm practice in growing and harvesting the crop.

Supply of Manure Limited

While manure is not a balanced plant food, nevertheless it should all be saved and applied economically. Enough manure is not produced to meet the needs of the average farmer. Where the supply is limited it is better to apply four to six tons per acre over the entire field rather than use a heavy application over a smaller area. The efficiency per ton of manure is greater where the small applications are used.

Both Seed and Hay Crop

Soy beans are cut for seed when most of the leaves have fallen and the pods are nearly ripe. When the crop is allowed to get this ripe it can ordinarily be harvested with a fair degree of satisfaction with a grain binder. If the crop is cut earlier than this, a grain binder does not work so very well. Soy beans are cut for hay when the lower leaves have turned yellow and the pods are about half filled. In this case it is best to use a mower and to handle the soy beans in the same way as ordinary hay. Full information along this line can be obtained from the Iowa station at Ames by applying for Bulletin 238, entitled "Soy Beans for Iowa."

Seed corn should never be tak from plants that lodge.

Much of the value of manure is los by weathering and leaching. * * *

Safety and Mileage For All Roads and Seasons

PERATORS of large truck, bus and cab fleets must have rugged, long-mileage tires if they are to make money. That is why so many of them have standardized on Firestone. Experienced race drivers, almost to a man, equip with Firestone. Car owners can have this same extra safety and economy-by using Gum-Dipped Cords.

Gum-Dipping, the Firestone extra process, impregnates and insulates every fiber of every cord with rubber-insures greater safety and comfort over rough and sandy roads-builds extra strength and flexibility into the sidewalls -- an exclusive feature that adds thousands of miles to the life of a tire.

Come in-let us save you money by equipping your car with a set of these wonderful tires-prices are still low.
