The quality of game meat depends on how the game is handled from the time of kill until served on the family table. While modern hunters pursue their sport mostly for the thrill of outdoor recreation, game foods properly dressed and prepared can add pleasant variety to the family menu.

Since the first hunter took weapon in hand to search for game, experience has accumulated in the field-dressing and preparation of game for eating.

The success of cooking venison depends to a great extent on the treatment the animal received when killed. If the hunter properly cares for the game after it is killed, the homemaker can prepare delicious and palatable game.

Venison is a rather dry meat and can be improved by adding butter or margarine, suet or other fat when broiling, pan-broiling or roasting. If you have a less tender carcass, there are ways of preparing the meat to make it tender and appetizing.

Many people prefer to marinate meat from more mature animals to reduce gamey flavor and make the meat more tender. A marinade is made by combining one-fourth part vinegar, three-fourths part water, sugar and seasoning. Place meat in the solution and refrigerate for 72 hours or longer.

The methods of cooking venison are the same as those for cooking other lean meats. Use dry heat for tender cuts and moist heat for less tender cuts.

The cuts of venison and suggested uses are as follows:

The hind and fore shanks are used in soups, stews and are ground for sausage, meat loaf and patties.

Round of the carcass is usually tender enough for steaks. If less tender, use it for Swiss steaks or grind it for sausage, patties or meat loaf.

Legs, if small, may be roasted in an uncovered pan without adding liquid.

Loin of venison is used for sirloins and porterhouse steaks or choice roasts.

Shoulder or Chuck should be cut into roast for pot roasting or ground.

Rump roast is used for roast. From a tender, young buck it may be roasted in an uncovered pan with no added liquid.

Flank or breast cuts contain considerable meat. Use them for soups, stews or grind for patties, meat loaf or sausage.

Neck of the carcass should have the tendons removed. It can then be roasted, used as stew or ground.

VENISON SWISS STEAK

1 1/2 pounds round steak
3 large onions
1 medium stalk celery
1 cup tomatoes
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
Salt and pepper

Steak should be about 1 1/2 inches thick. Dredge with flour and season with salt and pepper; brown in fat on both sides. Add the other ingredients. Cover tightly and cook at 350 degrees or over low heat on top of range until tender (about 1 and one-fourth hours.) Remove meat to platter and make a gravy from drippings in the pan. Serves 4.

Fashion is for everyone. The world of fashion offers such wide variety in every price range that it is now possible for a woman to dress well regardless of the limitations of her budget. Getting the most from your fashion dollars, however, requires planning, careful selection and honest appraisal of yourself.

A full-length mirror is an excellent investment that will start your wardrobe planning on the right foot.
