Pe e Maxwell's grave is marked with a granite stone, and Billie the Kid's grave is marked with two heavy slabs of timber. The old Fort Cemetery is about nine miles up the river from the city. Covers about one acre of ground. Most of the graves have been dug up and the ones that are still there show many years of standing. This old Fort Sumner cemetery is one of the historical spots of the state and should be better preserved.

THE STORY SO FAR

On their way to the newly-discovered "gold diggings", at Cottonwood, Colo., in the early Seventles, Robert Gilson, east-erner, who tells the story, and his partner, Buck Hayden, veteran miner, secretly witness bandits hold up a stagecoach and make away with an express box. Among the victims are a young woman, "Mrs. Deane" and Mrs. Barnaby, who intends to start a restaurant at the camp. Gll-son meets Marcus Handy, an editor on his way to set up the Cottonwood Courier. Arriving at Cottonwood, they enter a saloon, where an altercation between two men, one a pickpocket, arouses the mob to demand the lynching of the latter.

CHAPTER III—Continued -4-

"Drop that rope!" came a voice, a voice with ring and carry, which seemed to dominate all the noise. He who spoke stood in the door. Silence fell again-silence and quiet. It seemed that everyone froze in the midst of whatever he was doing-all except the newcomer. He was a tall man with a heavy brown mustache and imperial. He wore a black slouch hat of the G. A. R. pattern; and for all his height he moved with quick, flowing certainty. He did not wait for that mood of frozen hesitation to break; in two strides he had crossed to one of the empty chairs pushed against the wall when the players dropped their game. He stepped into it, stepped just as lightly to the table, his feet crunching on chips and the spilled stacks of twenty-dollar gold pieces. As the silence began to break into sinister mutterings, he spoke again:

"Bring that rope here-and that prisoner, too!"

Momentary sllence again. He stood, his feet planted apart, a drawn revolver in his left hand-which I thought odd. It rested so, close to his body, its muzzle a little lowered. His eyes seemed to take us all in.

The leader of the mob stood alone in the middle of the floor. He spoke suddenly:

"We'll hang a city marshal as quick as a pickpocket," he said. "Boys, bring on your rope. It's long enough for two."

"Drop that rope!" came from the man on the table, shifting his eyes, shifting slightly the muzzle of his gun. There the leader made his mistake. The muzzle was turned away from him: he had an instant to act. His hand went to his hip. In the same instant I had a glimpse of a dozen forms beginning a prudent drop toward the floor.

I never saw the man on the table change the direction of his muzzle from the back door to the center of the guired Buck. "Good as the gold you'll dig," said Talbot.

Black Jack.

"That's got to be proved," said Buck. "S'pose we kin look into that after I've seen the claim?"

Now watching this transaction idly from the outside, I had perceived that Talbot was eager to be gone. I was not surprised, therefore, when he said, and, I felt, with sincerity:

"I wanted to be travelin' tomorrow mornin'. That's why I'm sellin' so cheap.'

"Nothin' goes until I see your title's right," said Buck stubbornly. Here Huffaker came in with a solution. "Well, if Chris McGrath says it's right and sound, you'll believe him, won't you?"

"What's he got to do with it?" asked Buck.

"The whole works," said Huffaker. "He registers minin' claims, too." "Mebbe," allowed Buck.

So forth we went under the burning stars and through the thinning crowd, to find Town Marshal McGrath. We ran him to earth in the tiny Comstock Lode saloon, his foot on the bar rall, his hand on a glass of waters

In two minutes the marshal had certified unofficially but with certainty that No. 32 placer, held by William Talbot was a bona fide claim without encumbrance. As we left, Huffaker asked us about our lodging for the night. That question had been dimly troubling me all the evening. Our blankets were with our packs in the public corral. Sleeping there, on the wet, trampled ground, seemed out of the question.

"I sleep people in my shack," said Huffaker, "keep up the fire all night so you don't need blankets." We found. indeed, a dozen men already snoring under the table of the restaurant.

"Won't cost you nothin', seein's we done so much business-good night," whispered our host as he departed to his quarters in the rear.

I threw myself down by the stove of the Golden Eagle and, with one side roasting and the other freezing, slept until the cook woke me by stirring the fire for an early breakfast. In spite of youth, mountain air and fatigue. I was a little time in falling asleepthese had been the most crowded and excited three days of my life.

Cramped in every joint by one night on the hard floor, Buck, Talbot and I rolled out and breakfasted by candlelight. When we started forth the sun had risen for the world below, but for us it shone as yet only on the whiterimmed peaks above. From the snows of the peaks the breeze came in puffs. A little shrill and piercing at first touch, once you had filled your lungs it whipped your blood like wine. The public corral, where we had left our stock and packs, had as by floor. The motion was too quick. I magic changed over night. The piles was only aware that his right hand, of boxes and barrels which had risen above us when we unpacked and hitched in the twilight, had assumed new shapes; and other piles were pins. The leader had his gun out, and growing at the hands of the freighters. The very horses, mules and jacks flattened out into a little plateau. My eyes were searching, as they had all the morning been searching half consciously. I dropped deliberately behind Buck and Bill Talbot. And suddenly my nerve centers gave a jump, my cheeks a little tingle. There was a sign, painted with the cross-line of the "N" turned the wrong way, with the stems of the capitals at all angles from the perpendicular. "Mrs. Barnaby's Boarding House, Open for Business Next Tuesday," It read. Behind it stood a tent, the posts and ridgepoles in place, but the cover flopping in a state of collapse.

Bent down, earnestly and efficiently driving a tent-peg with the butt of a hatchet, was a form which I recognized as that of Mrs. Barnaby. In the rear, a big sheet-iron cook stove, set up in the open field, emitted a faint ghost of smoke from its abbreviated pipe as though a fire which served to get breakfast was now dying out. Beside it were great packing boxes, some open, some still nailed shut, and all, in spite of the conspicuous sign, "Handle With Care," lying as though some freighter had rolled them from the top of his load, and simply let them drop. Over the nearest box, head and shoulders half hidden, stooped the figure of another woman. As I looked, she dropped back on one knee, her arms full of tin plates, and faced me. It was Mrs. Deane. And my first glorious impression was of her hair-brown, chestnut-brown with the same light in the beating sun of the morning, that one sees in molasses candy when it is being pulled-a tawny undertone which glistens.

I had jerked up the head of my protesting horse, was about to give spur and to retreat in confusion, when she looked suddenly our way. . Her face lightened with a smile in which I read recognition, and she dropped her load into a box. Then she rose; took a step toward me. Embarrassment ran across me in a hot flush ; I felt for an instant as I did when, at my first dancing lesson, they told me to put my arm around the little lady.

She, on her part, was swaying across the uneven ground toward me, her eyes most friendly but her smile with that same reserve. Now she stopped and held up, palm outward, a pair of strong but slender hands. I noted with one eve that the left had a ring on the third finger: and, as she dropped them with a pretty flutter, that it was a plain gold band.

"I won't offer to shake hads," she was saying: "they're disgraceful with this unpacking. So you landed safely! I hope you staked your claim?"

"I think we're staked," I said, my embarrassment beginning to vanish, to yield to gloomy interior reflections on with standing in the polluted stream, and then, when I worked from the bank, congealed to chunks of ice by the shrill spring wind. Nevertheless, I worked with enthusiasm. My reward was that period late in the day when we assembled the scrapings from the riffles of our washer and panned them down still finer with our skillet and an old dishpan. Then at last the tiny flecks of gold began to glitter in the vellow mud. On the second day I even found a nugget about twice as big never packed and started without exas a buckshot. This Buck let me keep pressing his certain conviction that the as a souvenir; after all these years I have it yet.

It was brutally hard work. I thought that our struggles on the road had toughened me for anything; but when I woke on the second morning, muscles which I did not know I possessed creaked and ached their protest. My hands looked and felt like inflamed, red blisters, and my wet clothes rubbed me raw in a dozen places.

Above and below us along the stream, other men in groups of twos and threes toiled with the same concentrated monotony. And, meantime, just about the shoulder of the hill lay hidden the fascination of Cottonwood camp. By day, I could hear in rattles and roars, broken now and then by a louder sound of whose cause I could only speculate as I dug and rocked, rocked and dug.

As I Looked She Dropped Back on One Knee, Her Arms Full of Plates, and Faced Me.

It was by night, however, that the sounds and glimpses of Cottonwood became most alluring to youth and loneliness. On the second night, after we had stowed away our Won't we do any better than that?" "Oh, cert-if we strike a pocket." replied Buck. "A lot better. There was one good run of sand up in the Idaho diggin's that yielded sixty thousand dollars before she panned out." I choked back my answer. Speaking generally, Buck was a pessimist. All the way to Cottonwood, he had special obstacle of the day-whether mud, snow or steep grades-would plumb wreck us before night. By way of compensation, he became a sappy optimist in face of a prospect. Though he usually took pains to conceal his hopes from me, Buck expected any day to break into a pocket. He had seen others do it; why not he? Now I, who had laughed inwardly at Buck's dismal prophecies of disaster on the way to Cottonwood-toward the main object of this expedition, I was the pessimist. I could not yet believe in my soul the fact that these picturesque rocks of the mountains held wealth in chemical solution. I had come for adventure. I did not yet consider myself a citizen of the West; I still figared as a spectator at the drama, not in actor. Which may serve to introduce all there is to tell about me, Robert Gilson.

Tracing it back, I realize that the first impulse which sent me adventuring came one night in Holworthy hall during my senior year, and from Harry Tilden. He was a junior, and of a different crowd; in those days at Harvard we were very particular about our classes and crowds. Until that night, Tilden had been to me only a shadowy figure. It was ordained that he should for a moment blaze into a reality and then fade back into the shadows. That night I dropped into Harrison's room on some errand as triffing as borrowing a book. I found a rum-punch steaming on the table; and on the couch lounged Tilden, a big, vital figure of a Californian. caressing the dormitory cat. Some phrase of a his caught my attention. I forgot my errand and listened.

Tilden was talking of old days in the West. His father had crossed the plains to the Sacramento diggings in '49; his mother had come round the Horn. The family interests, it transpired, now lay invested mainly in a cattle ranch near a city of a witching strangeness called Santa Barbara. His uncle had fought Indians about Mount Shasta, chased buffalo on the plains and hunted grizzly bears in the Sierra, before settling down to an importing business in San Francisco.

Like most boys of my time. I had read dime novels-surreptitiously, for respectable parents forbade them along with cigarettes and other exciting juvenile pleasures. And so I knew held flat, had brushed across his gun. The "bang" sent the crowd to the floor as a strike in bowling drops the tenno more. It dropped clattering to the floor. His left hand went to his right biceps; and he sank slowly onto one knee.

A tall, rangy man with a hat like a marshal's pushed through the door.

"Charlie," said the marshal, "take that prisoner there. You with the rope, come here." The man with the rope, walking unsteadily, jerkily, crossed the floor. The audience was now beginning to get up; and the marshal spoke again, and again seemed to freeze evervone into a grotesque statue.

"Is there anybody else wants to shoot?" he inquired. No one responded. "All right," he continued. "There's been no lynchin' in this camp yet, and there won't be. Get that? Somebody fix up the man I just shot. He's only winged in the arm." He cast his eve about again. "Your blood was up, boys. Nothin' like a little blood to cool blood." His face had been as blank as a stone wall except for the steady blaze of his eyes. But now he smiled, and I liked the way his eyes crinkled. He leaped down from the table, turned his back deliberately on the crowd, began to strip the belt from the prisoner's arms; to snap on handcuffs, The babble broke out again. Three minutes before, it had an animal note. Now, it sparkled with laughter. Before the marshal, the deputy and their now voluble prisoner passed out of the door, the poker-players were sorting out chips and piles of gold pieces at the tables, the bartenders were taking orders, the stairs were black with an ascending crowd.

"He is sure a shootin' man," remarked Buck in a tone of deep admiration. "Who might it be?"

"Town marshal," replied Jim Huffaker briefly. "Name, Chris McGrath. You're right, he shoots."

"Who's mayor of this camp, anyhow?" inquired Buck.

"Ain't none;" replied Huffaker. "A town marshal like that is all the mayor we need- There! There's our man !" poker tables and laying hands on an individual who had just entered.

After all this space of years, the figure of Bill Talbot, who wanted to sell his claim, has grown a little dim in mind; he was to float into my life for a day only, and float out again never to reappear. Nor do I remember many details of the long dicker which he,

"Where's these galena locations?" asked the nearest.

"Up yon way-up the hill!" said Buck, scarcely glancing from his work. With no further question, they jerked the savage Spanish bits in the lathered mouths of their weary mounts, whirled he suddenly broke off, darting past the and spurred straight over the mushy ground, uphill.

Now, Bill Talbot was with us. The dicker finished, we saddled, mounted and started to inspect that end of our bargain which most interested us. Talbot's claim lay a mile up the creek : but the road was so jammed and miry that we elected to take a side trail across the hill, which here started Buck and Jim Huffaker conducted in abruptly from the road and presently vastly intensified. "Yes, we're going to have a home soon, Mrs. Barnaby and I! We've been sleeping under the edge of the canvas so far-but it's been great fun! Fortunately, it hasn't rained."

Mrs. Barnaby at this moment rose up from the tent peg, stood with one hand in the hollow of her back, and broke into the conversation-broke in like a flood.

"We're goin' to-maybe. We're goin' to if they deliver them pans and kittles-that freightin' company robbin' you right at the start and then leavin' out the pans and kittles, and goodness knows what's become of the carpenter I hired at ten dollars a day just to put the floor down which I could do myself-stampeded like a fool to the galena diggin's, I guess-and that sack of flour-" It flowed on, without punctuation or grammar; and from it all I gathered that Mrs. Barnaby's stakeout was merely temporary. She was erecting her tent on the bare ground, taking chances that there would be no rain until the pile of lumber stacked in between the boxes became a floor and a tent frame. "Anyhow, we open on Thursday if they eat off the stove," concluded Mrs. Barnaby.

"I hope I may come to see you when you get-settled," I said in parting. had hesitated for the proper word, and when I came out with that "settled." suggestive of moving time in old, ordered New England scenes, Mrs. Deane laughed. Her laugh-I had noticed that before-ran a little gamut, played a half-tune. But the veil of inscrutable reserve behind her eyes had thickened, become momentarily a curtain. The gamut of her laugh died away on a grace note; and "I hope so," was all she replied. She went back to the boxes then, and I had to remember, as I withdrew and mounted, that it would be bad manners to stare at her over my shoulder. However, as I gathered rein and rode away, I did myself the luxury of another look. She was in her graceful, half-kneeling pose beside the boxes; the morning sun was making tawny gold of her hair.

CHAPTER IV

Everyone who has picked wild berries knows the greedy joy in that innocent sport. You are getting something for nothing. And each bush, as you approach it, holds out glittering promises of a branch so bent and loaded that you have only to scrape it in order to fill your pail. Gold-digging. for the first three or four days at least, raises the same set of emotions.

coffee, I had washed up, shaved, and brushed my hair, with the intention of visiting camp. Buck had spoken suddenly from the corner of our eight-bytwelve cabin, where he was mending a splintered shovel handle with wire, to ask :

"What ye up to?"

"Thought I'd take a look at the camp before I turned in," I said. "Grand way to wash gold," remarked

Buck. "Do your work all week and lay off like a Christian Sat'day night an' Sunday, or you'll never git ahead in this game."

And though ours was a partnership. I had by now so completely yielded to the guidance of Buck in all things practical, that I accepted the rebuke with docility and turned in insteadto think, until I fell into dreamless sleep, of the camp and especially of that hillside where a boarding house must by now stand open for business. On the third night, I forced from Buck an answer to a question which he had hitherto evaded.

"How much are we taking out?"] asked.

has puzzled many historians.

Londinium is first mentioned by Tacitus, a Roman author, in A. D. 61. He says it is "a place greatly celebrated for the number of its merchants and the abundance of its supplies."

There are many proofs in English and Swedish museums of the intimate Intercourse between England and Scandinavia in early times, an intercourse that has probably gone on uninterruptedly for about 6,000 years. It may be conjectured that early Vikings from the south of Sweden ventured across the water and sailed up the mouth of the Thames and found a grove, which

"Thank you very much," said the actor gravely, as he adjusted it. "You know the company so much better than L"-Sporting and Dramatic that there was a West, full of Indians, cowboys, old scouts on the trail, mining camps, gambling houses and hairbreadth adventures. Yet I had never really grasped with my imagination that it was a part of my United States, which my far ancestors had sailed unknown seas to found and my father fought to preserve. It was merely a country bounded by the covers of books, like the Damascus of the "Arabian Nights" or the Troy of Homer. But now I realized, with a kind of intellectual shock in discovering the obvious, that the Far West lay not at the end of the rainbow, but at the terminus of a four-day railroad journey. Details over which my mind had skimmed lazily became vivid, actual, living, in the conversation of Harri-Just who is this Gilson fellow, hard soldering. Solders of low melting points, composed mainly of lead and tin in varying amounts, are known as soft solders, while those of high melting points, composed of varying amounts of copper, brass, zinc, silver and gold, are known as hard solders. The soft solder commonly used is made up of half lead and half tin, and melts at a temperature of 370 degrees Fahrenheit. The more lead there is in this alloy, the higher is its melting point, and an alloy composed of one part tin and two parts lead melts at 441 degrees Fahrenheit.

MOSOUITO FOUND TO BE AID TO DOCTOR

British Experts Use It in Treating Paralysis.

London -- "Can you lend us some mosquitoes-about 80-? We've got a patient we want bitten."

Startling as this query sounds, it is the sort of thing the British ministry of health is getting used to as a result of the latest researches at the Royal Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene, London, for the venemous little insect pest has its uses in the sacred cause of healing.

The mosquito in fact is, in certain cases, a "doctor," and he has been able to do, in cases of general paralysis and mental diseases, what human doctors have been unable to accomplish alone. So that the patient need not feel too grateful to the little pest, it must be said at once that "healing" is no part of the mosquito's intentions, for when he inserts his needle-like proboscis in the flesh of the patient selected for biting-treatment, he fondly imagines he is pursuing his old trade of "infecting." And this, in a way, he is doing-although his energies are now being directed by modern science.

Produces Malaria.

It has been found excellent results have been obtained in otherwise "incurable" mental and general paralysis cases where the patient has become infected with malaria, for when the malaria germs have been conquered recovery from paralysis follows in the majority of cases. "Doctor Mosquito" is, therefore, being called in to supply the inalaria. The ordinary doctors will do the rest.

At the Horton Mental hospital at Epsom Surrey there is a "mosquito room," where Prof. P. G. Shute, gold medalist of the College of Pestology, rears, with tender care, from 300 to 500 fine healthy mosquitoes, all guaranteed to bite ferociously, and able to infect you with any disease desired. Details of the case, for which a "loan" of good biting mosquitoes is required, are sent to Professor Shute, and he proceeds to prepare his "pets" for the ordeal.

In normal paralysis cases, about 80 will do, though sometimes 200 are required. Shute sees his "pets" get a good feed from a person suffering from malaria (this may be a bit painful for the malaria patient, but it helps to remove the virus, so is curative even in his case). When Shute is satisfied his mosquitoes have become thoroughly infected with malaria he sends them to the institution which has asked for them, Feed on the Patient.

On arrival they are allowed to enjoy themselves biting a person suffering from paralysis, though the bites are carefully regulated by the doctors in charge of the case. One day, perhaps 80 mosquitoes are loosed on the patient, the next day perhaps only 60. On the fourth or fifth day he may only have to entertain 30 or 40.

When the patient is first bitten his temperature rises as high as 105 degrees Fahrenheit, and it is allowed to remain at that until ten readings have been taken. Quinine is then administered, the malaria is treated normally, and when it disappears the symptoms of paralysis disappear with it, in the majority of cases, at any rate.

How He Discovered It.

Silver says it all started 14 years ago. He was wandering around in the High Sierra of Tuolumne county when there came a call for help from his brother in San Jose. Silver and his partner started out immediately. Down the Stanislaus river they went, along the trail that leads over Sonora pass, to Brightman's flats, 59 miles east of Sonora. Here they camped for the night. While the partner was saddling the pack mules in the morning Silver, in true prospector fashion, panned a little gravel in the river bed. Tiny and scattered but unmistakable was the gleam of gold. Silver's great dream was born.

He pushed on to San Jose, helped his brother and started back for the gold country. To his dismay, there was none to believe him. He knew that gold could be wrested from that river bed, but the experts smiled.

Engineer Takes a Chance. Warrington, a civil engineer with some knowledge of mining, finally decided to risk it. Painfully, almost inch by inch, they went over the territory, digging and panning. They prospected the side streams, Eagle creek, Cow creek, Niagara creek, and others. but found no gold. It existed only in the main valley of the Stanislaus. After months of labor, they filed their claims in Sonora.

Graybeards of the gold country link their venture with the legend of the Mexicans' mine. The story comes down from the days when the jumping frog of Calaveras was still a gay young blade and had never tasted buckshot in his life.

Two lowly Mexican sheep herders wandered into Sonora one morning with nuggets valued at $15,000. People tried to vain to solve the mystery of where they had discovered them.

Buttonhole bouquets of rubber for wear with beach costumes are also in high favor.

Earrings are a conspicuous part of the Parisian woman's scheme of self decoration this summer. The long pendants which disappeared for a time are back in more exaggerated form than ever. Crop Area Falls Off as Population Gains

Washington,-For the first time in history there has been a decrease in the crop area of the United States. Despite a marked increase in population, there was a reduction in the last five years of 19,000,000 acres in the area of -harvested crops, the Department of Agriculture has disclosed in an analysis of the agricultural census statistics. Notwithstanding the decrease, the crop area still is sufficient, in the opinion of department experts, to maintain a large volume of agricultural exports.

The 19,000,000 acres have reverted to pasture or have been allowed to lie idle, the cause being attributed chiefly to the agricultural depression of the last five years.

Largely as a result of the war-time prices, about 40,000,000 acres of pasture land were plowed up and put into crops between 1909 and 1919, and about 5,000,000 acres of forest land cleared for crops. Nearly half of this total, experts believe, was used to meet the increased European demand for foodstuffs. Owing to the extraordinary demands of the war period, the acreage of crop land in 1919 was nearly ten years ahead of what had been the previous rate of expansion relative to increase of population.

Plotted Path of the Hurricane by Radio

Washington .- The use of the radio compass in plotting the course of a storm has been revealed by an experiment made during the recent hurricane which swept the West Indies and the coast of Florida, according to a statement from the Navy department. Lieut. E. H. Kincaid, navigator of the navy transport, Kittery, plotted the hurricane by taking bearings while the ship was on the way from Port Au Prince, Haltl, to St. Thomas, Virgin Islands. He took the bearings of the point of heaviest static and from this data computed the center of the sweeping storm. Checking this with later weather reports, he found he had accurately plotted the path of the hurricane.

BRAND NEW LIVER How Dodson's Liver Tone

GET YOURSELF A

Makes You Feel the Old Liver Is Born Again.

Just off the slant of Old Piedmont where it rolls away into the foot-hills of South Georgia Bud Evans makes a good stand of cotton. A year ago he was too sick to even follow a plow. His right side seemed hard, felt as if his liver had turned to stone; belched gas all the time; couldn't hold up his head for the pain; calomel just turned him inside out. You couldn't imagine anyone sicker than Bud Evans. It just happened that an egg buyer dropped in on him one day and says: "What you need, Bud, is a dose of Dodson's Liver Tone-your liver is baked and full up so it doesn't work."

And so Bud got a bottle at the town drug store for a few cents. The very first night it loosened up so much sour bile and fermenting food that the swelling went down, his whole system righted itself and he was a new man entirely before noon. There is no question but that Dodson's Liver Tone will do more for bilious people than anything else ever known. It works easily and smoothly, without gripe or distress, and cleans out all the sour bile and sickening stuff that gives you headache, nausea, vomiting, bilious fever and all the other distresses due to obstinate constipation.

Get one bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, and if it doesn't make you feel like you had traded your old, worn-out liver for a new one full of pep, go to the druggist and he will refund the price.

V. The Ninth Commandment (v. 16). The sin almed at by this command is most deadly one-that of lying. This commandment may be broken: 1. By actual open lying.

By perjury-swearing to false-2 hoods by the name of God. 3. By slander.

By tale-bearing (Lev. 19:16). This is commonly done by repeating a report without investigating its truthfulness.

5. By creating a false impression (Ex. 23:1).

By a breach of promise. 6.

By withholding the truth.

By exaggeration. 8.

By flattery.

10. By recommending a man for a position of honor and trust who is unfitted for it.

VI. The Tenth Commandment (v. 17).

This commandment strikes at the desire for that which is unlawful for one to have. The sin does not lie in the desire to possess things, but in the desire to possess that which belongs to another. It is not wrong to have lands and personal property which one may have acquired honestly, but it is wrong to have the lands which belong to another. It is right for a man to have a wife, but it is sinful to have another's wife. This commandment goes back of all the rest. It deals not only with the open violation, but with the inner desires and motives. It strikes at the very purposes of the heart.
