I. B. Hanna, formerly of Kankakee, pals. The duel between Weaver and for him to acquire the habit of rustlforest reservations in Arizona and New Mexico, tells in a recent letter about a gang of outlaws in New Mexico that cannot be dislodged by the authorities. Mr. Hanna writes

"A band of about twenty desperate outlaws, that can't be driven from its fastness by the government, has its rendezvouz at White Rocks, within the Gila River forest reservation, in southwestern New Mexico, about ten miles northwest of Aima and five miles east of the Arizona line. The locality derives its name from the number of white rocks that overhang the caves; they can be seen for many miles. The waves are situated in the last range of the San Francisco mountains. To approach them one must climb a steep incline from the east for several miles. It is practically impossible to arrive within shooting distance withont being observed by those within.
