The Paths of Life

There's a path that's lined with roses sweet, Its a fragrant path that lures your feet, And a well dressed man with a winning smile Is urging you onward all the while, He points out the way where the roses grow, And his voice is pleading with you to go; His eyes tell what he dare not say, So, friend of mine, don't go that way.

There's a path that's dark and filled with gloom, Where the birds don't sing or the flowers bloom; Where there's hills to climb and the way seems long, And you think the road you took was wrong, But far ahead you will soon get sight Of a lovely place where the sky is bright; Then your heart will leap and you'll cry aloud, For a rain pour comes with every cloud, You will live a life that is free and gay, So, friend of mine, won't you go this way? —By Jessie Cordes.

A New Plow for Plains Farmers

In the Western and Great Plains wheat regions this year there has been much interest in a new plow, variously called

"one-way disk plow," "cylinder disk plow," "gold digger," "wheatland disk plow," "great plains disk plow," and similar names. Invented a few years ago by a Kansas farmer by the name of C. J. Angell, this plow resembles a disk harrow with disks all set in one direction. It cuts a strip six to ten feet wide any depth from merely scratching the surface to six inches deep. Its introduction resulted from the wide spread use of the combine which shifted the peak labor load from harvesting to plowing. Many farmers report larger yields following the use of the new plow as it enables them to get their plowing done in a short time following harvest, conserving a larger amount of moisture for the next crop. It also leaves the surface rough, with straw sticking up, preventing soil drifting to a great extent. This plow is also claimed to be ideal for summer fallow cultivation. It will cover ground at the rate of 30 to 40 acres per day. —Western Farm Life.

NEW YORK SKYLINES.—

By ELMU SCOTT WATSON. IN 1492 year 1492 there appeared at the court of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain a man named Christopher Columbus, or Cristobal Colon, a poverty-stricken, discouraged sea captain who at the age of fifty-six had all but given up a boyhood dream and the hope of ever realizing the fondest ambition of his life.

Discovery. There lurks in every breast some of the fire. That sent Columbus during unknown seas, there lurks in every human heart desire To find new continents. To such as these The woodland is a world, and continents They who seek shall as surely find.

as if they had taken leave of the world; others, unable to restrain their grief, broke out into loud and bitter lamentations; how they continued to be alarmed as the three tiny vessels plunged on into the wilderness of the water and especially as the needles of their compass seemed to be bewitched and varied more and more, as they went on, to the west of north instead of toward the North Star; how they talked with their leader to turn back and how in the words of the poet, the reply of Columbus to all questions was "Why shall you say at break of day? 'Sail on! Sail on! And on!'"

Such was the man whose great achievement is celebrated on October 12 of this year, 435 years after that achievement took place, and perhaps it was the romantic element in his nature which made him, despite red discouragement, hold fast to his dream of finding a shorter route to the wealth of the Orient by sailing directly west across the "Sea of Darkness." For the wise man of his day scoffed at his plan, ridiculed his idea that the earth was round like a ball, called him a visionary and a foolish schemer.

Let us go forth, as great Columbus said, And we shall find new archipelagoes— Sequestered paths that only deer have trod, Perhaps another continent, who knows?— Some cloistered valley hid from man removed, Some fragrant clearing hidden in the first.

There is much disagreement among historians as to the truth about this man, Christopher Columbus—dispute as to his paternity and his nationality and dispute as to his right to the title of "Discoverer of the New World." Seven kinds of Greeks are said to have claimed the great post, Homer, for their own. But no less than seventeen towns vie for the honor of being the birthplace of Columbus.

He obtained an audience with the king of Portugal and laid before him a definite proposal. He asked for three caravels to equip him for a voyage of discovery to the Indies. This was not his first appearance at the royal court of Spain. He had been there once before but had failed; for another monarch. The story of his failures and his final triumph, as given by Doctor Richman, follows:

Not long after his return, Guardian Juan Perez, and perhaps Pinson also, wrote to Queen Isabella, asking a further hearing for Columbus and his project. The request was granted. Columbus, repeating with emphasis the terms submitted to King John II, demanded of Ferdinand and Isabella a patent nobility, the admiralty of the ocean, the vice-royalty and government of all lands discovered, and a commission of 10 per cent upon everything within the limits of his admiralty which might be bought, exchanged, found or gained.

As in 1486, so in 1492, in the month of January, Columbus was dismissed a second time from the Spanish court and departed sorrowing. The royal flag streamed from the towers of the Alhambra, for Granada had fallen, but in this event our Genoese took little interest. His course led him toward Carayolis, to cost probably two million maravedis ($6,000), by comparison trifling.

Columbus was poverty stricken and, for once, discouraged. With what cheer he might, he met his friend, the former guardian, Antonio de Marchena, who was in the city of Seville, the one of the officials guardian. Juan Perez, once known. Twenty-eight years later traces of the same gas were found in uranium, and for the first time scientists knew that it was present on earth as well as in the sun. More years passed and it was discovered that helium was a product also of the disintegration of radium, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Still later, during the World War, Kansas housewives began to complain that the natural gas supplied for cooking was deficient both in heat and light. A university professor was sent to investigate and found in his samples that helium, a nonflammable, inert gas, was to blame. Its extraction in paying quantities from Texas gas wells followed. Famous Russian Crown. Probably the most valuable and interesting of all the Russian crowns was the one made in 1702 for Catherine II by Bausa, a celebrated jeweler of the day. Since the time of Catherine this crown has been used at the coronation of all the rulers of Russia.

Helium Gas First. The discovery of helium gas on the sun preceded its discovery in commercial quantities on the earth by about 50 years. Lockyer in 1868 found a new gas in the spectrum of the sun while studying the flames shooting out from its surface. The gas was new because the color of the light representing it, when analyzed by the spectroscopic, was distinctly different from anything previously

GAY WATERPROOF ENSEMBLES; OMBRE STRIPE WOOLENS POPULAR

"Rain, rain, go away, come again some other day. That's what the children say when they want to go and play—what with the dawn of this era of cunning rainy-day togetherness, this quaint little ditty is likely to lose out on a full chorus of juvenile voices...

Many of the Jernette sets also inclusive material is also featured in beige with green striping.

Materials that were formerly for fair days only, are now processed to stand the ravages of rain and storm.

An exceedingly good coat is a reversible garment, either of tweed, plaid silk or novelty woolen on one side, the other side being of rubberized crepe de chine.

A very complete and attractive rainy-day ensemble is shown here, all of rubberized plaid silk, including a becoming hat and a swaggy umbrella.

Lightweight woollens for frocks are in the foreground of the autumn mode.

Among woollens stressed for the making of the utilitarian dress, one sees considerable navy repps.

Kasha is another favorite color, being especially popular in beige and brown shades.
