Positive Thinking

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Morality Still Exists

We read many stories in newspapers of late about crookedness, short-changing and double dealing. Some people are apparently so discouraged with human nature that they think the morals and ethics of the American people are deteriorating. I do not think so at all. The fact that dishonesty hits the headlines is itself proof that it is unusual. If dishonesty were commonplace, it wouldn't be news.

Don't get the idea that most people aren't honest — because they are.

* * *

I was going downtown one day, sitting near the front of the bus, when I saw a man and a young boy, obviously his son, board the bus. There was a line of people waiting to board the bus and the driver was kept busy making change. I saw the father put his fare into the box at the entrance. The boy, however, was short of stature so the driver didn't see him and he slipped by the fare box with his money still in his hand.

The father had found a seat across from me and the boy joined him. "Dad, he didn't see me," he told his father excitedly, "I just slipped through and I still have my money. I'm getting a free ride."

* * *

The father thoughtfully looked down at his son and answered sternly, "That money, son, isn't yours any more. It belongs to the bus company. You bought a ride and they are fulfilling their part of the transaction, but, by not paying for the ride, you're not keeping your part of the deal. No, you don't own that money any more. The bus company does. And keeping it is plain dishonest. And besides, being a cheat isn't being a man. So you march right up there and give the driver his money."

The boy looked glum, but he got up, went to the front of the bus and dropped his fare into the box. The driver looked up and thanked him. When the boy came back to his seat and sat down, his father tapped him on the knee and said, "Now you're acting like a real man, son, and not a phony."

* * *

Well, as I watched this little episode with admiration, I thought about the graft, the little businessmen [illegible] their thumbs along [illegible] chops, the crooked pol[illegible] and all the other scandals in our headlines these days. I couldn't help feeling a lump in my throat. And before I got off the bus, I went up to this man and said, "Thanks a lot for showing that there are still some real people around who have the moral stuff of which our country was made." He grinned, "That's how I was brought up."

"You and me both," I replied.

It is with the little things, in childhood, that life-long attitudes are formed. Certainly we want our children to be smart and clever, but not at the sacrifice of honor, righteousness and decency. For if we do not keep these values, we shall lose all else.

City Postman Puts Personal Touch On Work

By ED TODD

But he's not unique.

Bob Grimes is a postman; he delivers mail to your doorstep or, more likely, curbside mailbox, if you happen to be on his 14-mile route in a northwest Midland residential-business district.

"Well, I enjoy what I'm doing, and if you don't, you won't do a very good job," he said on a recent route outing.

It was an uneventful trip.

And, likely, most ordinary.

But it was refreshing and, surely, because of Grimes' top-of-the-morning-to-you attitude, was without the hustle-and-bustle strain of today's work week.

Don't be misled, however. For Grimes does hustle. He does bustle. And he does scurry along. But it isn't all that obvious.

It was raining—a seemingly West Texas rarity—on the morning the "mounted" (motorized) route began. The lanky, balding Grimes, who sports greying sideburns and moustache, had spent the early morning hours "casing" (sorting) the morning mail to his customer-friends on Route No. 54.

On this particular morning, a Thursday, he had cased and bundled with leather straps somewhere around 2,500 letters and 400 or so magazines for his postal patrons.

That early-morning routine begins in the postal system's Graves Station at Wadley Avenue and Midkiff Road. Seventeen of Midland's 52 city

The orbital union lasted for 47 hours and 17 minutes. The undocking came at 10:26 a.m. CDT.

Stafford and his crewmates, Donald K. Slayton and Vance D. Brand, lingered near the Soyuz for a time, delicately guid-

Rural Mail Carrier Gets His Share Of 'Fun', Too

Mail carrier Cecil Craft heads down a long stretch of road in rural Midland County as he delivers the mail on Rural Route 1.

By JAN WILLIAMS

Some people think city mail carriers who hoof it get all the fun—getting the seats of their pants ripped out by their canine adversaries and what-not.

But out in the country things are not a whole lot different in that respect, as Cecil Craft will attest. Craft has been delivering mail in rural Midland County for the past 10 years and he gets his share of fun.

The day begins at 5:30 a.m. when Craft arrives at the main post office. His first task is to pick up the mail for his route. He then sorts it, ties it in bundles according to his delivery route and loads it into his car.

By 9:30 a.m. he is ready to cover Rural Route 1 which includes approximately 102 miles over an area a mile east and west of Rankin Highway and two miles east of Greenwood road.

Craft said he makes an average of 490 stops each day, delivering mail to 548 boxes. His route covers 27 miles of unpaved road.

Before he gets to his first mail box, however, he usually stops at a market along the way to pick up some fresh fruit to snack on until lunch time. Bananas are his favorite.

The first 30 miles of his route are the heaviest, with most of the mail boxes close together. Two of his stops are three miles apart with most of the rest being one-quarter to one-half mile apart.

"The mileage just about covers my expenses now," Craft said. "But if the price of gasoline continues to increase, the post office will have to increase the mileage allowance to cover it."

Craft has a metal seat with rollers he places in his front seat which allows him to slide across the seat to put mail in boxes on the opposite side.

"One lady patron followed me several miles one day," Craft said. "She finally pulled up beside me and wanted to know how I managed to slide across the seat so easily."

Craft said the only time he is required to get out of his car is when signatures are required on mail. He does make one exception, however.

"An elderly gentleman on my route almost got run over crossing the street to get his mail," Craft said. "So now I just get out and take it to him."

Craft said his arms sometimes get tired from stretching to open

Midland Postal Workers Will Be On Job Monday

All postal workers in Midland will be on the job Monday in spite of a standstill in negotiations between the U. S. Postal Service and two postal workers unions.

Gale Walton, president of the Midland Local of American Postal Workers Union, said he received a message Saturday from the APWU in Washington that no progress had been made in negotiations, but that all personnel were to report to work Monday morning.

"We'll be on the job Monday," Walton said. "But I can't say for Tuesday or Wednesday. It's just a day to day thing."

The threatened strike hinges on negotiations between the APWU, the National Association of Letter Carriers and the U.S. Postal Service concerning a two-year contract for the nation's 600,000 postal workers. The union contract expires at midnight tonight.

Postmaster David Holster of Midland indicated Friday that unless a 30-day extension for negotiations is agreed upon, the carriers nationwide "very definitely will go out on strike." The extension had not been agreed upon by late Saturday, but Walton said negotiations were expected to continue.

According to Thomas V. Hollingsworth, president of Local 3792 National Association of Letter Carriers, most of the local members of the NALC are expected to strike if a nationwide strike is called.

The American Postal Workers Union represents mail clerks, maintenance personnel, special delivery and the motor vehicle squadron.

BOND ELECTION LOOMS IN NEAR FUTURE—

BY GEORGE MASSEY

Bumps, potholes and cracks are fast becoming the rule rather than the exception on many of Midland's city streets, and the city's street paving and maintenance program is finding keeping up with the problem is hampered by inflation.

And, as street costs continue to increase, a bond issue election looms in the near future.

Fred Poe, assistant city manager, has estimated the bond issue price tag for bolstering the street funds at "$5 million." Poe said the $5 million would be a "middle of the road" compromise.

"With $10 million the city streets could be made just like glass," Poe said, "but I'm pretty sure that most people would be satisfied to keep the streets in a good useable condition with the lesser amount."

Another factor concerning the amount asked for in a street bond issue is how much money will be sought in several other possible bond issues due before Midland voters at just about the same time. City officials have indicated possible bond elections in the near future for airport funds and park funds, in addition to the street money.

At the same time, school trustees have indicated a possible bond election to obtain funds for public school air conditioning.

Fred Baker, public works director, has indicated that purchase of right-of-way for the proposed state highway project to widen Midkiff Road from U.S. 80 to Interstate 20 will deplete remaining street bond revenues of $149,925.

"As long as a street has not completely failed and can be kept usable with maintenance programs," Baker said, "we're not going to completely rebuild it. But some of the city's streets are nearing the point of having to be torn out and rebuilt."

A portion of the city's assessment paving program and all penetration paving are financed with revenue sharing funds, while the street maintenance program is financed with general fund money. "Other street improvements during the past few years have been financed from the 1959 general obligation street bond," Baker said, "which is all but depleted with the Midkiff Road right-of-way purchase."

The street division is currently engaged in a "remedial maintenance" effort on streets that have been determined by an engineering study to be savable, Baker said.

The engineering study, Baker said, revealed that many streets here were constructed with a standard residential paving design. He said, "These streets have now become thoroughfares and will no longer carry the loads imposed on them."

Baker included Midkiff Road, Midland Drive, Golf Course Road, Wadley Street, Illinois Street and A Street as, "Streets that must be rebuilt and constructed with proper strength to carry the present and anticipated traffic loads."

He indicated many other streets have been placed in the category of being usable for presently imposed and anticipated traffic loads under concentrated care of the maintenance program.

Baker said a program whereby newly constructed streets are built to minimum standards for traffic loads anticipated in the future is also being carried out.

The city engineering division currently tests all 287 miles of paved streets with a nuclear density device to determine subgrade, base and asphalt surface conditions.

The engineers also give the once-over to street paving being constructed by private developers in subdivisions to assure high quality paving in those areas, Baker said.

A report made by the Public Works Department revealed that private developers have paved approximately two miles of streets during the past year. The report indicated that approximately 4½ miles of additional paved streets were brought into the city during the annexation of land last summer.

It listed 130 miles of unpaved streets in the city which are "opened" for traffic use.

USDA Still Embroiled In Food Stamp Row

By JONATHAN WOLMAN
Associated Press Writer

Earl Butz keeps saying his Agriculture Department should not be in the welfare business. But the courts keep ruling that he must upgrade the food stamp program and meet legally mandated assistance obligations.

The Agriculture Department hasn't exhausted its legal options in the latest court battle over food stamps, but it's uncertain whether the department will carry on the fight after a string of defeats in related cases.

If it appeals and loses — or if it drops the legal fight — the department—USDA—is faced with a complicated and very expensive task in following court orders to make food stamps a nutritionally sound program.

Over the past several years the department has been continually embroiled in court cases over food stamps. The department has lost most of them.

Last month the sharpest and most far-reaching legal attack yet was endorsed by the U.S. Circuit Court in Washington, which ordered the department to upgrade its food stamp allotment system.

The court agreed with the Food Research and Action Center—FRAC, a consumer advocacy group, that USDA has been in violation of the law in not assuring recipients are able to obtain a nutritious diet.

In a decision very critical of some USDA procedures, a three-judge panel gave the department until Oct. 10 to implement new rules. Some 19.6 million persons currently receive stamps, coupons purchased for a sliding discount based on income. The court said most recipients do not receive enough aid to buy what they need to eat.

"Congressional intent is frustrated if the program is administered so that a substantial number of eligible households do not receive sufficient coupons," wrote Judge J. Skelly Wright in the decision.

John A. Harris, a USDA attorney, says the department may seek a rehearing of the case before the full U.S. Circuit Court, or may appeal to the Supreme Court. Immediate compliance seems unlikely unless the Department of Justice rejects attempts to push an appeal.

Court rebuffs like the June 12 order are not new to USDA.

Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz was the target of four suits before he released funds to implement the Women, Children and Infant—WIC—free food program in 1973.

For years, FRAC has been in courts all over the country suing local school boards in an effort to make USDA-subsidized school meal programs available.

Ranks Grow

But most court action has centered around the food stamp program. Food stamp ranks swelled to nearly 20 million this spring as the nation's recession victims looked to the government for aid. The program was serving about 13 million in the years prior to the recession. Government experts estimate that as many as 40 million persons are eligible for the stamps.

Ron Pollock, director of the Food Research and Action Center, spends much of his time suing USDA to force extension of federal food assistance.

"The department does not have a very enlightened secretary," says Pollock. "He is not known for helping poor people."

Butz counters that social welfare programs are not his job. He wants to rid USDA of all food programs that are not part of the over-all department plan to keep farm prices high while increasing exports and expanding crop research. That, says Butz, is his job.

A nutritionist at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare—HEW, who asked to remain anonymous, says of USDA officials: "They worry about moving food, not about healthy people."

The food stamp program was created in 1961 to rid farmers of crop surpluses "in a beneficial manner ... and to raise the level of nutrition among low-income households," said Judge Wright.

"The situation has completely changed now," said Butz in a recent interview. "The department doesn't have any surpluses except some milk. Food stamps have really become a welfare program."

He proposed food stamps be placed in HEW along with most other federal assistance programs.

The Ford administration recently shelved USDA proposals for sweeping reforms which might have increased food stamp assistance to the poor.

"They're taking a closer, longer look in the White House at all benefit programs," said a source at USDA. "They didn't want us to paint them into a corner."

Food stamps cost the government $5 billion in the fiscal year ended June 31, and Butz has been complaining that food assistance eats up too much of the USDA budget.

The department recently has taken the offensive on the food stamp controversy, issuing reports that thousands of students, persons living in communes and some middle-class families have lied their way onto food stamp rolls.

Many errors have been administrative, department figures show. One study showed 15.7 per cent of all recipient dollars went to "households ineligible for the program. However, almost half of these were to households which would have been eligible had the registration requirement been met."

"We're attempting to cut out the chiselers," Butz said.

Two attempts to deal with students and commune dwellers were ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

One, the so-called "hippie household provision," denied stamps to anyone living in a house with one or more unrelated people. It was ruled unconstitutional in a 1973 decision.

Another regulation would have disqualified anyone in a household where there is a person over 18 years old who is a dependent of a parent not eligible for stamps. While it would have forced many students off stamps, it also would have eliminated some welfare recipients. The rule was thrown out on a narrow, 5-4 vote, and another version now is in effect.

Midwest Governors Will Meet

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — Problems of energy, economics, unemployment and President Ford's proposal to use part of the Highway Trust Fund for mass transit will be discussed when the 14th annual Midwest Governor's Conference convenes today.

Governors or representatives of 15 Midwestern states will be asked to push for federal deregulation of new natural gas development for five years while supporting continuation of federal regulation of oil and alternate fuels "to fill the gap," according to William Watt, an assistant to Indiana Gov. Otis Bowen.

Watt, chairman of the governor's energy commission founded 30 years ago, said the governors "have never before taken a position on these two issues."

The energy report was submitted to the individual governors three months ago, Watt said. It will be made public for the first time on Tuesday.

Watt said the commission recommendation on deregulating gas exploration, however, would not force prices up. He said the resolution calls for an excess profits tax that can be avoided if developers put their profits back into further exploration.

A strip mine resolution calls for reclamation on federal lands and land on which the federal government has mineral rights. However, the issue does not mention private lands. The govenors will also consider asking the Justice Department to enforce antitrust laws for utilities, Watt said.

Dr. Ronald Powers, chairman of the governor's agricultural land use task force, will present a report on the land use and the need for land use planning amid burgeoning urban development.

Observers Believe Gandhi Planning More Repressions

By PETER ARNETT

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — She has kept the lid clamped tightly on India's volatile political system for nearly a month, but despite her enormous newly acquired powers, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi still has to reckon with current and potential opposition forces.

Experienced observers in major Indian cities believe her crackdown on press freedom and opposition leaders June 26 was just the first step in an escalating scale of repression that will be required to maintain her emergency rule.

"The situation cannot just stay put," said a well-known government analyst in New Delhi, commenting on statistics that nearly 7,000 political opponents and other people regarded as threats to her political and economic policies had been arrested.

"Mrs. Gandhi must either liberalize or take more repressive steps. I think she will choose the latter," he said.

Others believe the tougher the daughter of the late Jawaharla Nehru acts in changing the democratic course set by her prime minister father, the more likelihood of a revolt.

These current and potential trouble areas are seen likely to cloud the future of the 57-year-old Mrs. Gandhi:

—Her new economic policies helped win the acquiescence of the hungry masses because prices of essential foodstuffs dropped a few days later. But prices have already started to rise again and experts doubt any economic miracles will be performed.

—Mrs. Gandhi's arrest of every prominent political opposition leader in the country quickly stifled dissent, but gave authorities the responsibility for their lives, and some of these men, revered in their own areas by millions, are known to be seriously ill. The death of any of them in captivity could provoke popular agitation.

—Civil disobedience, a style of dissent made famous by the late Mohandas K. Gandhi, no relation to Mrs. Gandhi, has already been adopted by opposition parties in Gujarat state. Party leaders say they will attempt to spread the movement to other states in a grassroots protest against Mrs. Gandhi's rule. Similar protests helped oust the British rulers of India after World War II.

—By banning several extremist parties and threatening the existence of others, the New Delhi authorities are courting an explosion of guerrilla warfare that while localized and of no immediate threat to the central government, could disrupt important states.

—The 900,000-man Indian army has traditionally kept out of politics, but experts believe the generals might be tempted to enter the political fray if Mrs. Gandhi refuses to hand back the parliamentary process, and if general disorder ensues.

Mrs. Gandhi has a powerful weapon for survival in her undisputed control over the constitutional process. Her Congress party controls two-thirds of parliament "and anyone who looks inside the Congress party for a revolt is crazy, because it is just too dangerous for anyone to try," commented a Western diplomat.

With her control, Mrs. Gandhi is expected to win approval for her emergency laws when parliament meets in special session beginning Monday.

Experienced analysts also doubt Mrs. Gandhi is seriously concerned about the fate of her appeal of her conviction of election abuses in the 1971 campaign.

Mrs. Gandhi can even bypass the first real test of popular feeling about her decisions. Elections are scheduled to be held in Kerala state in south India in September, but experts believe she will postpone them.

There also is speculation that Mrs. Gandhi might introduce a new constitution, even declare herself president as Sheik Mujibur Rahman did in neighboring Bangladesh in January.

Mrs. Gandhi's honeymoon with the Indian masses has lost some of its glitter since the heady days of victory over Pakistan in the 1971 Bangladesh war.

After the recent takeover, the government deliberately courted the masses by forcing food prices down.

The sudden downturn in prices — as much as 30 per cent for some items — was widely heralded in the censored press, and ordinary people interviewed in several Indian cities spoke favorably of the new regime, many figuring lower prices a fair trade for democracy. Now that prices are starting to rise again, second thoughts can be heard in the same cities.

"There is no way the Indian economy is going to get better faster than a snail's pace," said a Western economist in Madras. "That means there will be one less justification for the emergency."

In Gujarat state, where the only open defiance of the new Indian emergency laws is visible, eight protesters deliberately courted arrest during a parade by reading tracts attacking the government. They were led into a police van.

The burst of protest activity in Gujarat indicates to some India specialists that the opposition is starting to recover from the stunning crackdown nearly a month ago. While its activity is still far from a revolt, when it is combined with guerrilla activities of outlawed extremist groups and a faltering economy, the situation could become dangerously explosive.

Mrs. Gandhi has a large police force to handle emergencies such as this, and also the 900,000 man army that has proved willing to assist in quelling serious disturbances in India in the past.

"But the army has never shot an Indian and has never been trained to treat Indians as potential enemies, as have the police," said a well known specialist on the armed forces. "If the army is asked to open fire on civilians there may be grave consequences."

More Golfers Play At Hogan

Attendance at the city's golf course at Hogan Park for the month of June was 5,473, and brought in a total revenue of $8,982 for the month.

A Progress Report released by the city has cited 36,503 persons have used the course so far this year. Total revenues at the golf facility through June amounted to $75,014.

Attendance at the golf course during the first six months of 1974 was 36,867 for a total revenue of $72,923. The previous June totals were 5,420 attendance and revenue for the month was $11,477.

Long Gurney Trial Heads For Jurors

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — After a long trial thick with tales of corruption and attempted cover-up, the slush fund scandal case involving former Sen. Edward J. Gurney heads for a jury this week.

For 86 days, jurors sat and listened as 105 witnesses paraded to the stand to testify in the bribery-conspiracy trial of Gurney and three other persons.

Among those testifying were Gurney himself, who swore he had no knowledge of an illegal fund-raising scheme, and young fund-raiser Larry Williams, who claimed Gurney knew.

Following closing arguments, which begin Tuesday, the jury will retire to sift through testimony and 500 exhibits in evidence.

Consipracy Charged

The formal charge against Gurney, ex-aide Joseph Bastien and former Federal Housing Administration officials K. Wayne Swiger and Ralph Koontz is conspiracy to raise a $233,000 political slush fund for Gurney by promising builders favored FHA assistance in return for payoffs.

Gurney, a 61-year-old Republican who won national attention as a member of the Senate Watergate committee, also is accused of bribery, accepting unlawful compensation and lying to a federal grand jury.

Maximum penalty on all seven charges if convicted is 42 years in prison and about $80,000 in fines.

Wrongdoing Denied

Gurney, the first incumbent senator to be indicted in half a century, took the stand four days and emphatically denied wrongdoing.

Gurney frequently said he couldn't remember specifics of dates, people or meetings dating back to 1971 — the year the government claims the conspiracy began.

Gurney recalled a Jan. 19, 1971, meeting where fund raising was discussed. But he said he couldn't remember if there was any discussion of Williams.

Prosecutors claim Williams was hired at that meeting and Gurney talked with him on the telephone.

$400,000 Raised

Williams told the jury he raised nearly $400,000 in Gurney's name between 1971-73 through builder shakedowns.

Williams, who served five months in jail after pleading guilty to charges growing out of the investigation, swore he never gave any of the money to Gurney personally. But he admitted pocketing $48,500.

Gurney insists it wasn't until July 1973 that he learned about any fund-raising irregularities, and ordered an investigation.

In the midst of the trial, Gurney's former chief aide and co-defendant James Groot switched his plea in a government agreement for leniency and testified against his ex-boss.

Groot, 32, claimed he didn't know and didn't think Gurney knew about the fund-raising effort before mid-1972. But after that, Groot said, he talked with Gurney and Williams separately and both acknowledged that the FHA connection did come up.

Two former political allies who were indicted with Gurney also made deals for leniency.

They were Earl M. "Duke" Crittenden and George Anderson. Both worked in Gurney's 1968 campaign and were state GOP officials. They were at that crucial January 1971 meeting and testified that the decision was made there to hire Williams as a fund raiser.

Quints' Doctors Optimistic

DALLAS (AP) — The one-day-old quintuplets' father was excited, their mother was tired and their doctors were optimistic Saturday.

Dr. Charles Rosenfeld, part of Friday morning's 20-member delivery team, said he was "exceptionally pleased with the condition of the babies," four girls and a boy.

"I tell the parents that the prognosis is an hour-by-hour, day-by-day proposition," said Dr. Rosenfeld, who is supervising the babies' treatment in Parkland Hospital's intensive care unit for infants where the cost is $150 per child a day. The couple is covered by insurance, a hospital spokesman said.

Dr. Jack Pritchard, who also helped with the deliveries and is now caring for the mother, Mrs. Debbie Davis, said she will see her babies for the first time today.

"Her first words when she was told she had five babies were, 'Oh, no,' " Dr. Pritchard said.

"She has realized that her lifestyle has abruptly and completely changed," said Dr. Pritchard who added that Mrs. Davis, 20, is tired but in good condition.

The father, Jerry Davis, 21, spent Friday night at the hospital and said Saturday he was still excited over his new family.

A hospital spokesman said the couple had chosen the name Casey for the boy. The girls have been named Chelsea, Charla, Chanda and Christa but the names have not been assigned to each girl as yet.

Davis, stranded in a hospital elevator while the babies were being delivered, said, after hearing the news, "I think we're going to have to get another house."

Davis makes about $175 a week as a mechanic at a Dallas equipment company. He and Debbie married three years ago after being high school sweethearts in nearby Lewisville where they still live.

Dr. Pritchard said Mrs. Davis had taken chlomide—a fertility drug which he said does not have a reputation for causing multiple birth.

Bob Clark, a hospital administrator, said he has answered over 100 inquiries from as far away as London, England, about the Davis quintuplets.

"The whole thing has been quite an experience," Clark said. "No one expected all of this, especially the Davises."

Actually the Davises had been told by their doctors to expect quadruplets. Dr. Pritchard said he was surprised when he found the fifth baby after making a final check.

"I felt another little bottom and I knew we had a bonus," he said.

Rural Mail Route Starting To Look More Urbanized

"The worst is the six-pound Sears and Roebuck catalog," he said. "Sometimes I get as many as 200 of them to deliver in one day."

Although his arms are not the only part of him that gets tired during the 102-mile trip, there are times he is glad to be confined to the safety of his car.

Since the seat of Craft's pants were out of reach, a determined German Shepherd decided to bite chunks of rubber out of his car tires.

"I told the supervisor about it," Craft said. "He told the dog's owner that if he didn't do something about the dog he would have to stop his mail delivery. Eventually the owner got rid of the dog."

But there's still an Airedale that's attracted to Craft's car, and he's sometimes joined by various other undetermined breeds.

Dogs, however, are not the only animals Craft comes in contact with along his route. Several of his patron's mailboxes are guarded by cows, horses and mules.

Along the unpopulated sections of road, it's not unusual for ground squirrels, coyotes and tarantulas to cross his path.

As for his patrons, Craft said he knows several of them very well.

"I sometimes spend an hour or more visiting with them," he said. "Lots of times people like to visit. I have a lot of good patrons. Sometimes I get some static, but most of them are real fine people."

Craft writes numbers on the bundles of mail in the order that he delivers them. He said a few persons sometimes complain about the number being written on their mail.

Craft said the rural routes, of which there are three in Midland, started building up when much of the acreage in the area was sold in quarter-acre sections and people began putting mobile homes on them.

"When I first started the route 10 years ago, I covered about 74 miles and had 30 patrons," Craft said. "It has gradually climbed up to what it is now and most of the mileage I have accumulated in the last year."

Steady Increase

For a family to get rural mail delivery, there must be a family every seven-tenths of a mile. Craft said the number of people getting rural mail delivery is continually increasing.

Not all of his patron's mailboxes are near their houses, however. Some people have to drive as far as five miles to get to their mailboxes and others a mile and a quarter to two miles.

Craft said the rural routes are actually small post offices, serving the same function as the post offices in town.

"Aside from delivering mail, I sell stamps, money orders and register letters," Craft said. "I don't do it as often as I used to. More people are going to town for those services now. It's not really country out here anymore in that sense. It's more suburban. But several years ago I performed a lot of those services."

Flooding Recalled

The old saying that the mail is delivered in any kind of weather very definitely applies to Craft. He recalls the heavy rains and flooding in Midland about seven years ago when it rained seven inches in three hours.

"I made all my deliveries that day except for one where the mailbox was completely under water," Craft said.

Craft's route is referred to as a heavy duty K route. It includes 59 hours for six days and since he can only get paid for 48 hours he has a relief carrier every Saturday.

Other routes are J routes, where the carrier takes a day off every other week, and H routes, where the carrier works the full six days. Time is evaluated on the basis of the type of mail that is delivered. For instance, so much time is allotted for the delivery of a magazine and so much for a letter, etc.

Last Tuesday, Craft was selected as driver of the month by the post office. It is a $25 cash award given monthly to the outstanding driver selected for sustained performance based on postal driving without preventable accidents, traffic citations or violations.

Craft, who has had 10 years of accident-free driving, is the first rural mail carrier in Midland to receive the award.

By mid-morning Craft has usually covered 25 miles and delivered mail to 300 boxes. At noon he stops for a sandwich and coke at a small grocery store along his route and chats with the owner for a while. He usually winds up his route about 3:30 p.m. and gets back to the main post office by 4 p.m.

Craft has been a postal employe for 25 years, serving as a mail clerk the first 15 years. He thinks his job as a rural mail carrier is the best there is and it is apparent he gets a great deal of satisfaction out of doing it.

"There's not a mail carrier working here who wouldn't rather have a rural route," Craft said.

Both Sides In Postal Talks Are Eager To Avoid Walkout

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postal union leaders said Saturday they would be willing to extend the contract to avoid a mail strike if satisfactory progress was made in negotiations before the midnight today deadline.

Both sides were eager to avoid a walkout and union leaders urged postal workers to report to work as scheduled Monday unless they received different instructions from the leadership.

"If certain things can be accomplished by Sunday, I think the unions will agree to a short extension of the contract," said President Francis Filbey, of the 250,000-member American Postal Workers Union, largest of four involved in the talks.

W. J. Usery Jr., President Ford's top labor troubleshooter, said serious differences separated the parties, requiring "hard bargaining and some tough decision that will have to be made by both sides."

He said if it was not possible to get a settlement tonight then he was hopeful of a preliminary agreement on which union and management negotiators "could shake hands" by 10 p.m. today.

Two major issues remaining to be settled along with the final wage package was continuation of the no-layoff clause demanded by the unions and management's right to dictate work rules to increase productivity in the Postal Service.

The chief management negotiator, Darrell Brown, told newsmen that "wide and important differences" remained over these issues, but added that "we're going to stay at it in order to reach an agreement within the short time that remains."

The average clerk, postman or pickup truck driver now makes about $13,500 per year at top scale, plus fringe benefits.

Harwood Cites Reverse Discrimination At UTPB

ODESSA (AP) — The faculty president of The University of Texas-Permian Basin said Saturday the university's "reverse discrimination" practice of hiring blacks and women in preference over white males is partly responsible for his resigning.

Dr. Edwin S. Harwood of Midland said he resigned from his position as head of the anthropology and sociology faculty at UTPB about two weeks ago because of dissatisfaction with university hiring practices. He also said he believed there were bad administrative decisions on how he was allowed to run his faculty.

"We have laws in this country and people have equal protection here," Harwood said. "You can't discriminate against one group now simply because other groups were discriminated against in the past."

Harwood, who has taught at Harvard and Rice universities, said his resignation is one indication of what he said is a great deal dissatisfaction among faculty members at UTPB with university and UT System policies and administration.

Harwood said the administration at the upper level institution is in violation of federal law, specifically the 1964 Civil Rights Act in its faculty hiring practices which he said gave preference to women, blacks and Mexican Americans.

The faculty senate passed a resolution several months ago stating the body didn't think race or sex should be the criteria in retaining or hiring faculty, Harwood said.

He also said the senate aquired two memoranda from Dr. V. R. Cardozier, acting president of the university, to faculty heads and deans stressing the hiring of minority personnel whenever possible.

Harwood said he had sent the Cardozier memoranda to U.S. Rep. George Mahon, D-Tex., and Mahon had written Harwood several times promising him that he would look into the matter.

Cardozier said Harwood "is a very fine man, but is a purist on many theoretical questions."

Killers Of Priests Excommunicated

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The Honduran Roman Catholic church excommunicated Saturday the killers of two foreign priests whose mutilated bodies were found with five other bodies in a dynamited well.

One priest was from the United States and the other was from Colombia.

A statement signed by the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Hector Enrique Santos, archbishop of Tegucigalpa, did not name the killers but said they were "immediately excommunicated."

Thunderstorm Lashes Area

The Midland area was subjected to a violent thunderstorm late Saturday that dropped nearly two inches of rain on the western portions of the city in a three-hour electrical display.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal issued severe thunderstorm warnings from 8 p.m. to 10:45 p.m. Saturday, but reports from the Department of Public Safety showed only minor flooding of area highways.

The weather station reported that 1.94 inches of rain along with pea sized hail and winds up to 50 miles an hour hit Air Terminal during the height of the storm activity.

Long strands of blue-white lighting could be seen for several hours as the cell moved southward, and tremendous claps of thunder were plentiful in far west Midland and over the airport.

Weathermen said Midland was not the only county to receive the benefits of the July moisture. Air Terminal weather radar was showing rain and electrical activity in nearly every county throughout the 17-county Permian Basin area.

Foreman of the mail carriers stationed there is Buddy Evans, who began his career in 1948 as a mail carrier.

On this day, Grimes and his fellow carriers nimbly file the mail numerically according to street name. The mailmen make assorted comments, some about the rainy weather which seemed to lighten and lift spirits.

Raincoats don't wear out from use in West Texas; they're tossed around, neglected, or just put away. But, anyway, the carriers seemed prepared for the low overcast day. The rain was pleasant, and the streets were nearly covered with streams and puddles of fresh rainfall.

The mail carriers have loaded their vehicles, mostly "Anglicized" automatic Jeeps, for the day's run. Grimes' mailcar, also modified for curbside driving, is a two-seat, red, white and blue International Harvester van.

It was still raining when Grimes pulled out from the station to began the day's route. It was some time between 9:30 and 10 a.m..

"Lookie there," Grimes said, glancing to his left as he drove northward on Garfield Street, "there's the little Mississippi coming down." Water was cascading into a small but lively stream.

Grimes was steadily loping toward his route.

"I'll tell you," he said, " . . . when you know somebody, you will do a better job of carrying (the mail)" than if mail is no more than "just (street) numbers" to the mailman.

Profitable Hobby

Grimes, now in his 24th year with the postal service, began his post office work in Midland in 1952 when he was mustered out of the U. S. Navy; he was a machinist during the Korean War. Since then, he has adapted his naval trade to a "hobby": He makes creative ironworks, professionally.

"I can build just about anything you want out of iron," he said, not boasting, but matter-of-factly. "I only like to build one of a kind . . . . It ceases to be a challenge to make a copy."

Grimes is 50 now, and is looking somewhat fondly but not too eagerly toward retirement. (His ironworks shop is at his home—just he and the wife now—at 2002 Midland Drive.) He is self-guaranteed to keep busy, and has developed a philosophy to give purpose to his work and pastime:

"I'm just going through this life once, and I'm not coming back. It's like I said (earlier), 'If you're not an asset, you're a detriment.'"

Grimes is anything but a detriment; the folks on his route like him. They like him very much, and it's obvious.

A ride with him will clearly tell you that, and likely nobody's going to be pretentious about it either.

"I like to know all of my customers," he said. "I want to know properly how to handle their mail." Well, Grimes, who stands about as tall as the legendary 6-foot-6 Sam Houston, pretty well sees and knows, from his vantage point, what's going on.

Knows Pastimes

He can tell you the livelihood of folks on his route, where they've come from, where they're going (should they be leaving), their pastimes, and, occasionally, what's cooking for supper, and what's brewing for the weekend.

"I know everybody on my route and their dog, their grandmother and grandchildren," Grimes said. He is averaging about a new customer per day on his route where residential housing is under construction.

"These are some pretty high-priced shanties out here," Grimes said. He drives onto Winchester Court, and makes the turn-around. There, he hand carries mail up to the townhouses. He makes about 20 walking stops on that brief tour. "I know everybody and their bird dogs out here," he said.

The postman's other walking route is in Oak Ridge Square, which is replete with specialty stores and shoppes, and good coffee.

Non-Stop

Elsewhere, it's a mounted route for Grimes. With the greatest of ease—or so it appears—he pulls alongside mailbox after mailbox, slows down, flips the mailbox covers down, pitches in the mail, closes the mailbox tops—all without pulling to a complete stop.

"Whatever it takes to get it (mail) in on time, I do," Grimes said. "People expect their mail on time. I know I would." Grimes takes time out for chats with his customer-friends when the timing is right. Neither does he bypass coffee breaks.

Grimes makes another turn to serve another street.

"We're going to plow Auburn (Place) right down through here the same way," Grimes said. He deposits mail, sometimes stopping to lay the red flag to rest when picking up out-going mail.

"That ole boy over here," to his right, Grimes said, "plays chess by mail. He's just a young guy."

Most of the working people along his route are in petroleum-related businesses, generally at the management level. Along his route also are store managers, physicians and lawyers, bank executives, and a newspaper editor.

Admittedly, Grimes has a choice route gained, he said, because of his seniority with the postal service.

Grimes made another stop, though the red flag wasn't up. In its place was a leaf. "When they've got some greenry on the mailbox, you know there's something in it," he said. He explained that some kids had taken the flag down.

More Efficient

Curbside mail delivery, Grimes said, is more efficient than doorstep or porch delivery.

"If they (postal patrons) could go to the curbside mailbox, it would drop the revenue" needed to operate the postal system, he said. But, he said, most city folks don't seem ready for the roadside mailbox—which country folks have long enjoyed (and needed) along with RFD (rural free delivery).

(The government kicked off RFD in 1896, and had begun city delivery—also free of charge—in 1863.)

Mailman Grimes is the vanguard of his people's mail.

"I have covered their mail from time to time for 20 years," he said of some of his customers. "I just don't like to see my people get their mail screwed up—not that another carrier would do it."

And the people appreciate Grimes' attitude. Commented a Grimes patron on her mailman: "I'd vote for whatever he's running for."

Well, Grimes is just fine, judging by his occasional whistling and more frequent humming a tune, and by the spirit of his route.

"If you do it right," he said, "it's a pleasure to be of service. . . . If you don't like your job I'll guarantee you won't do a very good job of it."

Grimes also is good at trucking along. He has a perfect—accident-free—driving record. "A lot of people look and just don't see. You have your mind on something else," he said.

"Most (people) just herd their cars—don't drive them. They just herd them between the marks."

On this day, Grimes was what he called "hot"—harmonizing. His timing was par excellence. The workday, which started off raining, ended in a spring-like coolness.

"You wouldn't believe," Grimes said. "It came out even . . . no mis-throws, no mark-ups (address changes gone uncaught). That's what every carrier is striving to do."

"I like to work for them like I'd like for them to work for me," he said.

Parking Receipts Increase Slightly

Parking lot receipts from the city's Midland Regional Air Terminal facility amounted to $12,698 during the month of June.

This year a total of $106,512 has been added to the city revenue account from operation of the airport parking facility, according to a recent city progress report.

In June of 1974, parking lot receipts amounted to $12,105 with the six-month total for the previous year $100,737.

Animal Fees Up

Fees collected for animals handled at the city animal shelter amounted to $569 during June and total $6,414 or the year, it was revelaed in a city progress report.

Animal fees collected during the previous month of June were $67 with the first six months of 1974 bringing in fees amounting to $2,872.

Inflation Hinders Street Repairs

cited in the report as the assessment paving program, carrying a total cost of $581,000 with the city's share amounting to $430,500. The balance of the project is paid for by abutting property owners. "The large amount of city participation is due to paving to be placed adjacent to city owned property," Baker said. The city pays for the entire cost of any paving project where it does not abutt private property.

The report listed major streets on the assessment paving as Garfield from Haynes to FM 868; Wadley from I to Big Spring; A from Dormard to Wadley; Rankin Highway from Stokes to Interstate 20, and Cuthbert west of Midland Drive.

Other streets on the assessment paving were "minor ones" several blocks in length which filled in unpaved areas for improved drainage, Baker said.

The city is currently participating with the county in construction of penetration paving (no curb or gutter) on several streets. The co-op program covers approximately five miles to be improved with the city purchasing all material, base, asphalt and cover rock. Baker said the material cost would run approximately $60,000.

He said paving and maintenance materials were "hard to come by" last year, and noted that although materials are available this year "the cost has increased tremendously."

Last year hot mix material could be purchased at $10.25 per ton. Current hot mix prices are $15 per ton.

Cold mix material purchased last year at $10.25 per ton is now going for $12 per ton.

Two years ago, Baker said, asphalt was purchased at 12 cents per gallon. "Now," he said, "It costs us 29 cents per gallon in transport loads and up to 45 cents per gallon if bought in smaller portions.

Cover rock that could be bought at $4.90 per cubic yard last year now runs $7.45.

"The street maintenance program has simply got to have additional funds. The street division budget for 1973-74 was $524,279. The 1974-75 budget was $733,440," Baker said.

The last budget included more than $220,000 for purchase of material to carry on the street maintenance program, and costs are continuing to rise, Baker said.

The city's street seal coating program, a part of the maintenance program, with a planned 110 mile project, is approximately half finished. Baker indicated the seal coat program should be completed sometime this summer.

A city progress report released for the month of June listed 140 square yards of pavement repairs, 153 blocks of street grading and 44 blocks of alley grading accomplished. The report showed more than a 1,000 miles of streets were swept.

It listed 2,644 square yards of penetration paving placed and 59.26 tons of hot-mix cold-lay material used.

Under paving projects, the progress report said, "Contractor is continuing work on Princeton and Cuthbert. Five units of the program were accepted by the city council." They were on Austin, Bedford and Gulf streets.

Private contractor paving was listed as underway in the Hundle Heights addition. Penetration and seal coating showed work continuing on Lamesa Road—two "courses" have been applied on all penetration paving that have been primed. To date, 513,000 square yards have been completed on the seal coat program.

Contractor work was listed as underway on paving Siesta Lane and Ohio Avenue.

Inspection Fees Show Increase

Revenues amounting to $6,542 were taken-in by the city inspection department on building permit applications during the month of June.

Inspection department earnings were revealed in a city progress report. The report cited total department revenue for permits this year as $36,656.

Last year, the inspection department made $37,424 during the first six months with the previous June total being $5,239.

Nixon Directs Futile Effort To Save Accident Victims

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon was "really affected" by the tragedy of a fatal traffic accident he happened upon, his son-in-law says.

But Edward Cox also said Nixon still was able to take charge of unsuccessful attempts to save the lives of three Marines—two Californians and a Texan—who died in the smashup.

"It really affected him. The tragedy of it really struck him," Cox said Friday in a telephone interview.

Nixon, his daughter, Tricia, and Cox were returning to the former president's estate at nearby San Clemente from the golf course at Camp Pendleton when they came to the scene of the head-on collision that claimed the lives of the three Marines.

The victims were identified as Cpl. Ramiro A. Delgado Jr., 20, San Antonio, Tex., Sgt. David A. Vansl, 28, Oceanside, Calif. and Sgt. Larry W. Grise, 24, San Clemente, Calif.

Nixon ordered his car stopped and spent about an hour at the accident scene, trying to aid the three servicemen, Cox said.

Cox said the accident occurred about two minutes before Nixon's car reached the scene Thursday afternoon. Secret Service agents accompanying Nixon were going to pass by the wreckage "but the president saw the accident and said right away, 'Stop. Stop the car.'"

Cox said a warrant officer was directing the rescue attempt and that Nixon asked him, "Can we give you any help? We've got first aid equipment."

"Yes sir, we sure can use that," the officer replied.

Cox said Nixon then took charge of the rescue attempts and ordered the Secret Service agents to call for a medevac helicopter to aid two injured Marines in one car. They died later at a hospital. The one Marine in the other car died at the scene and was "not a very pretty sight," he added.

One of the Marines in the second car was trapped in the vehicle, his foot wedged against the brake pedal, Cox said. Nixon ordered one of the Secret Service agents to get a crowbar from his car to free the man.

Cox said that as he, his wife and Nixon left the accident scene, the former president "looked out the window and said, 'You know, these two fellows were going off the base and looking forward to a good time. They were in their dress blue uniforms.'"

The former president was concerned about the two men and called the camp commander "first thing in the morning" to learn of their conditions, Cox said.

Bystanders at the crash recognized Nixon but paid no special attention to him as they worked to aid the victims, Cox said. When Nixon and the others left, a warrant officer and a captain saluted and shook his hand, he added.

CBS Turns Down Nixon Offer To Sell Memoirs

NEW YORK (AP) — The president of CBS News said Saturday the network had turned aside an attempt by former President Richard M. Nixon to sell a televised memoir of his presidential years that excluded any comment on Watergate.

CBS News President Richard Salant said literary agent Irving Lazar, representing the former president, made the approach. It did not reach the stage of a formal offer and no financial terms were discussed, he said.

Salant said that "without Watergate, any memoir would be incomplete. Given the fact that Watergate remains hard news, the interview would remain ineligible since we do not pay for hard news."

Vacation Time in Bellringing Land — My best girl friend for some 30 years — Mary — is with me this time and we are enjoying being together and doing some of the things together that we have wanted to do for a long time. Mary has spent 40 years in the classroom and believe it or not, I have spent about the same amount of time banging out some sort of column and ministering to the needs of my less favored brethern. Oklahoma, East Texas and perhaps Louisiana (north part) will be scenes of our visit we hope before we return to the best place in the world: The Golden West of West Texas and Southeastern New Mexico. Linkup In Space Ends

Leonov and Valeri Jubasov watched as the larger American craft fired beams of light at the Soviet spaceship in a study of the rarified atmosphere in space.

The spaceships will gradually move further apart today. Then, the Soviets will fire retrorockets to settle their craft into the embrace of earth's atmosphere. The Soyuz will parachute to a south central Russian plain early Monday morning.

Apollo will continue its flight until Thursday.

Like two friends reluctant to part, the spaceships separated once and then came together again in a test of the the docking system jointly designed by the two countries.

Both undocking exercises were televised to earth from the Apollo craft.

As the American ship first backed away, the Soyuz slowly receded, its solar power panels giving it the appearance of a perfectly gliding bird.

Leonov and Kubasov aimed a camera at the sun, using Apollo's shadow to capuure photographs of the solar corona, an envelope of gases usually blocked from view by the fiery brillance of the sun.

When the crafts were separated by 160 feet, the Apollo swung back to reunion.

The redocking was to retest the tulip-shaped docking collar jointly designed by the two countries. This time, the Soyuz docking device was the "active" half of the system. It was cocked and ready to grasp and seal itself to the Apollo's retracted collar.

The docking test, reuniting the craft after 32 minutes apart, was successful.

Apollo and Soyuz were together again for about three hours and Stafford gave the Soviets what he called "a little present of music."

Then he played a recording of the song "Hello Darlin" sung in Russian by Conway Twitty.

Apollo mission control told Stafford "that sounded like it was from far western Oklahoma, around Kiev."

Then it was time for the final parting.

The Soviets unlatched the docking collar and the ships swung free. The five space voyagers said little as they parted.

Operating as separate ships in orbits of their own, the two space crews will perform independent science experiments.

The men of Apollo will conduct earth observations, study the faint radiation from ancient and distant stars and collect information on the speeding, invisible high energy particles of solar radiation that sprays with unseen violence through their craft.

The two days of Soyuz and Apollo union, the first linkup in space of mankind's two space-faring nations, was conducted in an exhilerating atmosphere of friendship.

The spacemen shuttled back and forth between the two ships, sharing meals, exchanging gifts and beaming to earth televised views of their fellowship.

Stafford said the exercise was the dawn "of a new era in the history of man," and Leonov said it was "only the beginning of a great human journey into outer space."

The men talked of their vision of the future, a new age in which men of all nations would explore distant planets and build factories in space to make unique products for a better life on earth.

Apollo mission control told the astronauts that their space adventure was already touching the lives of men on earth.

In a news summary read to the crew, mission control quoted the Soviet news agency Tass as reporting that a Russian worker had named his newborn twins "Apollo" and "Soyuz."

"Our congratulations to the gentleman," commented Stafford.

They were also told a new drink, called "the link-up" had been introduced in a London pub. It's made of American whisky and Russian vodka with a teaspoon of fresh lime and shaken well in ice.

"Sounds great," said Brand. Slayton asked: "Can you send one up?"

Oil Price Rollback Veto Set Monday

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford intends to veto on Monday a bill rolling back the price of U.S. oil to $11.30 a barrel, a spokesman announced Saturday.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said the President "believes strongly this piece of legislation is unacceptable" and would increase U.S. reliance on foreign imports by as much as 350,000 barrels a day.

The bill, which won final congressional approval Thursday, would continue the President's authority to control oil prices, but would roll back the price of new oil to $11.30 a barrel.

The bill would also leave the price of old oil — oil produced from wells in existence prior to 1972 — at $5.25 a barrel.

Nessen said Ford wants Congress to go along with his proposal to phase out price controls on old oil over a 30-month period. The alternative, Nessen said, would be a complete lifting of all price controls on Aug. 31 when the petroleum allocation act expires.

However, Nessen said it appears likely that Congress will vote on Tuesday to block the President's phase-out plan. On that vote, Nessen commented, "realistically speaking the outlook is not good."

Under the President's phase-out plan, the White House has said gasoline prices will rise a total of seven cents over the 30-day period. Nessen said he did not know what the effect on gasoline prices would be if Ford's vetoes are sustained and price controls go out of existence on Aug. 31, but he said there would probably be an immediate increase in prices.

Big Brother Program Gets Started Thursday

Midlanders have an opportunity to make some new friends.

The new friends are children eight to 17 years old. The opportunity will present itself 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the Western State Bank at an orientation meeting of the Big Brother-Big Sister Program.

The program is a part of Family Services of Midland, an agency funded by the United Way. Mrs. LaDoyce Lambert, coordinator of the program, said the program's purpose is "to offer to fatherless or motherless boys and girls, ages 8-17, hope and the opportunity for further growth and development through friendship with an adult on a one-to-one basis.

"The big brother or big sister offers the precious gift of the friendship of a mature, moral well adjusted man or woman to a child who needs such friendship and guidance in order to develop to his or her fullest potential."

Mrs. Lambert estimates that there are around 2,400 or 2,500 Midland children in one parent families. She says that all such children over seven years old are eligible for a big brother or big sister.

However, these are not the only children who are eligible. Mrs. Lambert says that children with incapacitated parents may also take part in the program.

Mrs. Lambert says that "big brothers and big sisters are not to be a substitute for the mother or father. Neither are they to be baby sitters, disciplinarians, counselors or providers of a taxi service. They are simply to be a good friend to the boy or girl."

Mrs. Lambert recommends that the big brother "spend at least two or three hours a week" with his little brother. She emphasizes, however, that money should be used sparingly in the pair's relationship.

"You cannot buy the child's friendship," she said.

According to Mrs. Lambert, anyone over 18 may apply to be a big brother or big sister. After an application has been approved by the Family Services staff, the prospective big brother or big sister will be interviewed by Mrs. Lambert and a member of the staff.

When the person has been accepted into the program, a little brother or sister will be selected for him or her on the basis of their similar interests.

"The match will be for a trial period and will be closely supervised by a staff person, who will make sure that the big brother or sister, little brother or sister and parent are happy with the arrangement," she said. "After two months the relationship will be firmly established and the friendship will progress."

Mrs. Lambert said that she anticipates more prospective little brothers and sisters than big brothers and sisters.

"Consequently, we plan to have group activities for the boys and girls who do not have a big brother or big sister," she said. "College students who are home for the summer or other people who will be leaving town soon, may be able to help us in this respect."

Mrs. Lambert indicated that Thursday's orientation meeting will be for both prospective big brothers and sisters as well as prospective little brothers and sisters.

Lefty Frizzell Suffers Stroke

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Veteran country music star Lefty Frizzell was in critical condition Saturday in a Nashville hospital after suffering a massive stroke earlier in the day, acccording to hospital officials.

A spokesman at Memorial Hospital said Frizzell, 47, was in the intensive care unit, but declined to speculate on his prognosis.

Frizzell began making a name for himself in the country music field in 1950 with a record in which both sides reached No. 1 on the country music charts. The first was "I Love You a Thousand Ways" and the other was "If You've Got the Money Honey, I've Got the Time."

16 Die As Trains Collide In Yugoslavia

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Sixteen persons were killed and 37 were injured Saturday when an express train crashed headon into a local passenger train unloading at a suburban station.

The casualty figures were given by Dragan Milovc, head of the investigating team. He said a preliminary examination indicated that human error caused the disaster.

A railway guard at the station told authorities that he heard the station master give several orders for the standing train to leave the station but it delayed because there were over 100 pieces of baggage to be unloaded.

Miladin Trkulja, a passenger on the local train, said he heard the station master shout, "Men jump out of the train, a train is coming!" Trkulja added that he and his girl friend climbed out through a window seconds before the crash and were unharmed.

According to the initial investigation, the express was travelling at 40 miles an hour when it plowed into the local train at the Zemun Police station six miles northwest of downtown Belgrade. Authorities said the local was scheduled to stop in the station for only one minute but remained longer for the unloading of baggage.

The express, en route to Sarajevo from Belgrade, is allowed to pass through the station at 50 miles an hour and the investigators said there was proof that the engneer applied the brakes when he saw the other train ahead. He was detained for questioning along with a station official.

Rescue workers said all of the killed and injured were on the local train and three of its cars were destroyed. It was on its way to Belgrade from western Yugoslavia.

Premer Djemal Bjedc and other government officials went to the scene of the accident.

Last August, an express train carrying homebound vacationers derailed near Zagreb and 150 persons were killed. Two engineers were later charged with "grave criminal acton" and are awaiting trial. The government accused them of operating the train at more than 56 miles an hour in a 50 m.p.h. zone and of ignoring a light that warned of poor visibility.

Television Boon Or Bane For Nation's Children?

By DOROTHY CRYDER
Copley News Service

Parents today have a visitor in their homes. It produces a variety of reactions and can be found in over 95 per cent of American households. The visitor is television, and it has been here since the 1950s, almost two decades ago.

Many adults feel a certain amount of guilt about watching television. They think it is less worthwhile than reading a book or cleaning up the yard.

This is partly because of the ambivalence about the programs themselves.

While we declare publicly that it is essential to have many regular news and cultural programs on television, it is much easier to turn the dial to the movie rerun or the comedy hour which is insane but relaxing.

Also an incredible deluge of advertising accompanies television programs, coloring our attitudes and speech to such an extent that advertising slogans become national catchphrases.

Although parents learn to cope with their own feelings about television, they often are confused about their children's viewing attitudes. Most people over 21 can remember a time before television took over as mass entertainer.

But for young children and adolescents life without television is as unthinkable as life without electricity or cars or the sky.

Television fascinates many children, often more than radio, records or books. While parents report that some children are bored by watching and voluntarily seek out other activities, most will sit passively for hours absorbing whatever images move across the screen and the jumble of music, words, programs and ads that make up a television sound track.

John Condry, associate professor of human development and family studies at Cornell University, said our understanding of the impact of this medium has lagged far behind its commercial success.

"We have become only recently aware of the changes it has brought in the nature of politics, the entertainment industry and the dissemination of news," he pointed out.

"Whether these changes will be, in the long run, good or bad still is to be determined.

"Yet the changes television brings to these and other areas of American life may prove trivial compared to its potential effect upon the lives of children," he stressed.

What can parents do to cope with television and to help their children live with this new medium?

Linda Behrends and Mary Jo Berglund, teachers and members of Action For Children's Television, recommend "The Family Guide to Children's Television," from which some excerpts are taken in this story.

Written by Evelyn Kaye, the book incorporates the experience of many parents from different parts of the country and different ways of life, including those involved with the work on Action for Children's Television (ACT).

Mrs. Behrends pointed out statistically children spend more time watching television than in any other single activity except sleep.

Television sets in homes with preschool children are on approximately 54 hours a week according to viewing figures from A. C. Nielsen.

Children under five years of age watch television an average of between 22 to 25 hours a week, which means three to four hours a day.

"By the time a child graduates from high school, he will have spent an average of 15,000 hours watching television compared with 11,000 hours in school," Mrs. Behrends said.

Mrs. Berglund said what bothers them most about television is the passivity it forces on children—the passivity that requires all activity to be produced for them, not by them.

"This, I feel, must have a powerful influence on any child's capacity to handle his normal aggressive impulses."

Army Trying To Find 1,500 Subjects Of LSD Tests

By DON WATERS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army says about 1,500 soldiers and civilians took part in service-sponsored tests of LSD during the 1950s and '60s and that it is trying to track down the subjects to determine whether any suffered after-effects from the hallucinogenic drug.

In its first official announcement of the full scope of the experiments, the Army said Friday night it knows of 585 persons, mostly soldiers, who were tested directly by the military at the Edgewood, Md., Arsenal, Ft. Benning, Ga., Ft. Bragg, N.C., and the Dugway Proving Ground in Utah between 1959 and 1967.

In addition, it said roughly 900 civilians were subjects of Army-sponsored LSD experimentation between 1956 and 1959 at the University of Maryland Psychiatric Institute, the New York Psychiatric Institute, the University of Wisconsin, the University of Washington Medical School and the Tulane University Department of Neurology and Psychiatry.

As it has in previous statements, the Army stressed that only volunteers were used in the experiments. It said the tests, ended in 1967, were aimed at determining the effects of LSD on military performance.

An Army spokesman said the service has the names of the 585 persons who participated in the original series of tests and is trying to contact them to set up physical and mental evaluation of any after-effects.

But he said the Army has no list of the 900 or so others and will rely on the universities and hospitals involved to come up with their names.

The announcement indicated that the Army has not completed plans for the checkups, but it said they would have to be performed at several locations because of the large number of persons involved.

The National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council Medical Followup Agency and the Veterans Administration will be asked to help with the examinations, it said.

The examinations already have begun in a limited way, with an effort to examine 34 soldiers given LSD in tests at Ft. Benning in 1960.

Nineteen of those subjects have been examined at Walter Reed Army Medical Center here over the last year, and the results are expected to be known this fall after analysis is completed, the Army said.

Of the other 15 in the Ft. Benning group, seven have reported they are in good health, seven have not been located and one was killed in Vietnam, it said.

Attention to government-sponsored tests of LSD was renewed recently after the family of civilian Army scientist Frank Olson announced plans to sue the Central Intelligence Agency over an experimentation incident the Olsons say led to his death in 1953. He died in a fall from a New York hotel room.

The family says Olson had been given the drug without his permission, a contention disputed by a former CIA official who also was involved in the drug project.

Ford To Attend Meet At Helsinki

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford will go to Helsinki, Finland, July 30-Aug. 1 to take part in the 35-nation summit meeting of the European Security Conference, it was announced Saturday.

The President is expected to leave Washington by next Saturday on the Helsinki trip which is understood to be the forerunner to additional stops in Bonn, Warsaw, Bucharest and Belgrade. Mrs. Ford is expected to accompany the President on the 10-day trip.

The Helsinki trip was announced after the European Security Conference delegates finally reached an agreement Friday on the charter that the leaders of the member nations will adopt at their Helsinki meeting.

The charter has been under negotiation for more than two years.

The White House said in a statement issued by Press Secretary Ron Nessen that the President's presence in Helsinki "reflects our view that the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe final document, which includes declarations of political resolve and intent on a broad range of East-West issues, represents a positive step in our continuing efforts to build a more stable and productive East-West relationship."

An advance team is already in Europe making plans for the presidential trip, which has been tentative for some weeks while the Security Conference delegates were overcoming last-minute conflicts in the charter negotiations.

Ford plans to be back in Washington in time for a previously scheduled meeting there with Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Miki on Aug. 5-6.

A detailed itinerary is expected to be announced by the White House as plans develop.

Soviet Communist Party Chief Leonid Breshnev is expected to be in Helsinki, too, to join Ford and the leaders of the 33 other nations for what will be the final phase of the European Security Conference.

The meeting will bring to a formal close the long negotiations and permit leaders to sign the final document that has come out of it covering a wide range of issues including troop maneuvers.

Red Cross Safety School Scheduled

The West Texas Division of the American Red Cross reminds that the annual Texas Aquatic and First Aid School will be held Aug. 10-20 at Baylor University in Waco.

Students will participate in classes to learn skills to qualify them as Red Cross Safety Instructors and other instructors.

Further information about, and applications for, the Texas Water Safety and First Aid School may be obtained by contacting any local Red Cross Chapter, or by writing the Safety Programs Department, West Texas Division, American Red Cross, Box 12406, Fort Worth, Texas, 76116.

Killeen On List

AUSTIN (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock said Saturday that he will include Killeen in his sales tax raids planned for Tuesday and Wednesday.

He declined to say what stores would be raided in Killeen, however, to preserve the element of surprise.

Bullock previously had announced plans to seize the property of a number of businesses in Fort Worth for non-payment of sales taxes collected from customers and owed to the state.

"Our Fort Worth office has been getting lots of calls from people who are wanting to come in and sit down," he said.

The comptroller said he would be in San Antonio Monday for the auction of numerous cases of liquor to pay the $405,000 in sales taxes owed by a liquor chain in that city. An auditorium seating 500 has been rented for the auction, and Bullock said a parking lot will be used for the expected overflow.

Murder Trials Set This Week

The murder trial of Midlander Audrey Sheppard, charged with the shooting death last September of her husband, Delmir Sheppard, 49, is to begin with the selection of jurors at 9 a.m. Monday in 142nd District Court here.

A second murder trial slated for the week is that of Manuel Galindo Suchil of Odessa. He is charged with stabbing to death Jose Pablo Bejarano Vazquez, 23, of Midland in 1970. Vazquez, decomposed body was found in a Cotton Flat pasture off Road south of Midland in November 1970.

The two defendants are free on bond.

Thefts, Burglaries Keep Police Busy

A 17-year-old Midland man suspected of prowling on used car lots on Midland's westside Friday night, was arrested by Midland police Sgt. Jim McFadden and booked for removing serial numbers from a stereo tape player and carrying a dagger.

He had been freed on bond from county jail Saturday but not yet charged with the alleged offenses.

McFadden said he stopped the youth in the 4200 block of West Highway 80 and spied an eight-track stereo tape player partially hidden under the driver's seat of the youth's car.

W. M. Gilliland, 4222 Greenbriar Drive, Saturday told Midland police that a radio antenna on a Gulf Oil Co. truck was stolen from the vehicle parked at his residence.

At the Snowhite Laundry & Cleaners' No. 1 shop at 315 S. Marienfeld St., burglars used a crowbar to break in cigarette and soft-drink vending machines. About $55 in coins was taken in the break-in, police reported Friday.

David K. McAllister, 1602 N. Main St., reported that two boys, ages 6 or 7, took a clock valued at $25 from a car parked behind the Texas Employment Commission, 501 N. Loraine St., Friday. He said the boys opened the left rear door of the car, picked up the timepiece and ran away.

Police reported that four windows were broken in an apparent burglary attempt at Ben Milam Elementary School, 301 E. Dormard St.

Reported stolen from the Elks Lodge, 1009 W. Cuthbert St., late Friday was a bottle of scotch whisky valued at $13.

Confiscated Booze To Be Sold By State At Auction Monday

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — About 15,000 cases of liquor, beer and wine are to go on the auction block here Monday, with the proceeds going to settle back taxes claimed by the State of Texas.

The way was cleared for the auction on Friday when court rulings lifted a temporary restraining order and denied a request for another.

State comptroller Bob Bullock planned to auction the liquor, confiscated in May from three package stores, to satisfy $405,000 in delinquent taxes.

Bullock said the taxes are owed by Cut Rate-Economy Discount Beverage and Liquor Corp., a San Antonio dealer.

Block Distributing Co., also of San Antonio, had won a restraining order against the auction, claiming to have an $82,000 lien on the confiscated liquor.

After Bullock and Block agreed to put the auction proceeds in escrow until the lien situation can be settled, the restraining order was lifted Friday by Retired State District Court Judge Max Boyer. Boyer hears cases from time to time to help alleviate the backlog, as do other retired judges.

But Boyer, sitting in 37th District Court, denied Cut-Rate's request for a temporary order. Lawyers said they would appeal to block the auction. Cut-Rate Boyer's ruling.

Big City Influence Defeated Study Of Texas' Food Needs

By ANDY WELCH
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Big city influence has caused the defeat of a $55,000 study into the future of food production and distribution in Texas.

"This isn't going to be of much benefit to me," said Houston Mayor Fred Hofheinz, who convinced the Texas Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations to defeat the food study by a 7-4 vote.

At the same time, the TACIR membership voted unanimously on Hofheinz' motion to spend $43,000 on a study into the impact of the Texas Open Records Act.

Calling the Records act "hodge-podge legislation," Hofheinz has need for such an interpretation since a Houston newspaper is currently challenging the authority of the Houston Police Department to withhold police records.

TACIR is a 26-member commission of federal, state, county, city and school officials which makes studies and recommendations on all aspects of government. Its overall objection is to help the various levels of government with streamline operations and avoid bureaucratic "red tape."

TACIR Executive Director Jim Ray saw the study of food production and distribution as "a small exploratory type thing."

It would have been the first inter-agency undertaking on food in Texas, and would have involved joint cooperation from the Texas Department of Agriculture, Department of Public Welfare, Department of Health Resources and legislative committees.

The idea did have some support.

Fred Pfeiffer, general manager of the San Antonio River Authority said, "This is an area like energy, and a crisis is going to be upon us. We need to begin thinking probing and gathering data and guidance to government."

Ray proposed that the commission direct its staff to study the interrelationship of energy and water on the production of food. He suggested much of work could be coordinated with Gov. Dolph Briscoe's Water Task Force.

Staff members wrote, "Possibilities range from the extreme of food riots and food rationing to the more present realities of assuring water for irrigation and avoiding conversion of prime agricultural land to lesser purposes."

Knowing Hofheinz carried influence with most of the commission, Ray suggested the study could investigate water resources for Houston-area rice producers, along with South Texas cotton and wheat on the High Plains.

Pfeiffer, Rep. Tim Von Dohlen of Goliad, Sen. Max Sherman of Amarillo and one other member supported the plan. Sherman said, "I'm concerned, since taxes keep going up and productive land continues to decline."

Sherman also pointed out that House Speaker Bill Clayton, a TACIR member, also had concern over the problem of food production and would be interested in such a study. But Clayton wasn't there to sway any members.

Hofheinz also got support from Dallas City Manager George Schrader in opposing the study.

Dirt, Squirt & Quirt

— FARM, DAIRY AND RANCH NEWS —

By CHARLES GREEN
Midland County Agent

Good rain showers were received in much of the area this past week and coupled with the moisture received in early July are keeping soil moisture supplies in good shape. The unseasonably cool temperatures, however, slowed crop growth, especially cotton. What is needed now is sunny, warm weather to insure optimum response of crops and native pastures to the good soil moisture.

The week of July 25-31 has been proclaimed as National Farm Safety Week, and this year's theme is "Planning Prevents Accidents." Each year this event is observed to initiate and promote safety on America's farms and ranches. It is sponsored by the National Safety Council and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Farm and ranch accidents continue at a high rate across the United States, and producers must join together to take steps to bring a turnaround of this situation.

Last year was a particularly bad year for Midland County, with one fatality and other disabling accidents involving farm machinery.

Accidents in 1974 claimed the lives of more than 5,000 farm residents and caused more than 500,000 disabling injuries. More than half the deaths occurred in motor vehicle accidents, with about one-fourth of the deaths and 150,000 of the disabling injuries caused by farm work accidents.

Cost of these accidents, including farm fires, is estimated at almost $3 billion, representing an oppressive burden on farm productivity aims.

A further look at farm accident figures compiled by the National Safety Council shows that one of every five farm accidents occurred in farm buildings where the victim was struck by a falling or flying object. One of five injuries in the homeyard areas involved falls from the same level, while injuries in homes involved falls from a different level. Other survey information shows that one of four injuries in the field was the result of the victim being caught in or between accident-causing objects, while collisions were the most frequent type of accidents on roads and highways.

Farmers and ranchers can do a great deal to control accidents by taking spot inventories of possible accident situations and developing a plan for accident prevention.

Now is the time for home gardeners in Midland County to check turf grass areas in their home landscape for white grub infestations. This soil insect is a very destructive pest of turfgrasses in home lawns, especially Bermuda grass and St. Augustine. It attacks the roots of the grass plants and when their numbers become excessive, their feeding activity can result in severe damage to the turfgrass.

The adults, known as May or June beetles, are about ½-to ⅝-inch long and vary from light brown to black in coloration. The larvae or grub worms are white with brown heads and the hind parts of their bodies are smooth and shiny with dark body contents showing through.

The grubs feed on the roots and underground stems of grasses and other plants and in warm weather usually stay within one to three inches below the soil surface.

To check for white grubs take a shovel and cut a one square foot section of sod and examine all the roots and soil to a depth of 4 inches for grubs. Examine several spots in the lawn.

For effective control of grubs, insecticide application must be applied to infested areas when the grubs are less than ½-inch long. Improper timing of treatments in the early spring with insecticide - fertilizer combinations have resulted in insecticide resistant grubworms in the Midland area. When more than 2 grubs per square foot are found insecticide treatment is justified. Diazinon is the material suggested in West Texas. The granular form is easiest to apply. Suggested rate is 1 pound of 14 per cent granules or 6 pounds of 2 per cent granules per 1,000 square feet of turf. After application of the granules the grass should be dragged with a water hose to knock the granules down near the soil surface and ½ to one inch of water applied to carry the material into the top surface of the soil.

Sorghum, Sunflowers Maturing Rapidly

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. (AP) — The sorghum harvest is nearly complete in South Texas and the crop is maturing rapidly over Southwest, South Central and Southeast Texas, Dr. John Hutchison, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, says.

The 1975 sorghum crop should be considerably larger in Texas than that of last year, as many farmers switched from cotton because of poor market prices, he said. However, Hutchison said yields in South Texas have been down because of dry spring weather.

Sunflowers, a relatively new crop that has been planted in widespread sections of the state, are maturing rapidly in most areas, he said. Some early fields are being harvested.

Most pastures and ranges have good forage for livestock, Hutchison said. A good hay crop is also being made in most sections.

District agricultural agents gave these reports:

Panhandle: A few fields of wheat are still being harvested. Yields have been good and prices are increasing. Corn, sorghum and sunflowers look good. Onions are being harvested. Yields and quality are good. Feedlots are filled to 75 per cent of capacity.

South Plains water is being applied to crops grown under irrigation. A good onion crop and early potatoes are being harvested. The second cutting of alfalfa is complete. Some sunflowers are being sprayed to control sunflower moths. Some counties need rain.

Rolling Plains: Alfalfa is producing good to excellent yields. Greenbugs and midge are infesting some sorghum fields. Cotton is making excellent growth although fleahoppers, thrips, aphids and boll weevils are increasing. Guar, soybeans and blackeyed peas are making good progress. Broomweed infestations are widespread.

North Central: Peanuts and soybeans are making good progress. Hay making remains active although showers last week caused interruptions. A short peach crop is being harvested.

Northeast: Cotton is in bloom and boll weevil numbers are generally heavy. Corn is in the roasting-ear stage. Vegetable and peach harvesting remains active. Most of the tomato crop has been harvested.

Far West: Crop and range conditions continue to improve in some areas but a general rain is needed. Cotton and sorghum are making good to excellent growth. Marketing of early lambs is about complete.

West Central: Cotton is making good growth. Sorghum prospects are good in most counties. Peanuts are making good progress although the crop is late because of weather conditions. The pecan crop is being damaged by webworms and other insects. Most pastures and ranges need rain.

Central: A few counties are still dry despite recent rains. Cotton is making good growth and early fields are in bloom. Infestations of the lesser cornstalk borer are increasing in Comanche County. Hay crops are producing good yields.

East: Cotton is blooming. Corn is in the dough stage. Producers are harvesting hay between showers. Watermelon harvesting is active. Walnut caterpillars are damaging the pecan crop.

Southeast and Upper Gulf Coast: Harvesting of corn and sorghum has started. Early yields are good. Cotton bolls are maturing. Watermelons are being harvested. Hay making is active. Some pastures need fertilizer.

South Central: Corn is in the hard dough stage. Hay baling is making good progress. Spraying for insects in pecans remains active.

Southwest: Sorghum is being harvested in the southern section. Peanuts are maturing rapidly. Vegetable harvesting is complete and producers are busy getting land in shape for fall plantings.

South: Sorghum yields are averaging 2,000 pounds per acre in the Corpus Christi area. Dryland cotton is opening rapidly and defoliants are being applied. Melon harvesting is ending in Zapata and Jim Wells counties. Some buffelgrass seed is being harvested. Screwworms, hornflies and ear ticks are increasing in livestock.

McCamey Council Delays Telephone Rate Hike Action

McCAMEY — Action on Southwestern Bell's request for a telephone rate increase was postponed by the McCamey City Council at its regular meeting.

The council is expected to act on the request at its next regular meeting.

In other business, the council endorsed a letter from Superintendent of Schools Bill Little to the State Highway Department requesting the lowering of the speed limit from 30 to 20 miles per hour on Burleson Street in the vicinity of McCamey schools.

John Menefee, city attorney, presented a resume of specifications and contract terms for the drilling of the city's two water wells. The resume was prepared by the engineering firm of Freese, Nichols and Esmond. Sealed bids for the contract will be accepted and opened at a special meeting of the council on July 28.

Gibson's To Expand Center

Construction of a 35,000 square foot addition and exterior remodeling for Gibson's Discount Center, 3111 Cuthbert, was announced Saturday by Gerald Helm, Gibson's executive vice president.

The new addition, adjoining the east side of the present store building, will house a full-line building and home improvement center.

The center will carry a large stock of pre-cut and random-length lumber, wide selection of paneling, interior and exterior doors, shutters, ceiling and floor tile, light fixtures and electrical supplies, roofing materials, insulation, plumbing fixtures and supplies, and hundreds of other items associated with building construction and home improvement.

"We plan to have available in this center most all materials necessary for the construction and improvement of any type building facility," Helm said.

The exterior renovation will be highlighted by tall concave concrete pillars spaced at intervals across the front of the store and along the new area on the east.

Tile awnings will be erected above the walkways between the pillars. The store's exterior walls will be restyled with a new facade and a new store sign attached.

The new addition will include nine check-out stands featuring the newly-introduced electronic cash registers, and three doorways to allow customers easy entrance and exit from the east side of the building.

Completion of the addition, third in the store's eight-year history, will bring the total store area to 125,000 square feet. Completion date is scheduled for early fall. Area Builders, Inc. is the general contractor.

28 Building Permits Issued

Construction activity in Midland quickened its pace last week with 28 building permits issued by the city inspection department totaling $965,850. Yearly construction costs listed on permits amounts to more than $13.7 million.

Commercial alteration permits lead the building activity with a $475,000 permit issued to Gibson's Discount Center for alterations to the eastside of its present structure. The alteration will change that portion of the building into a family center.

Store officials told inspection department personnel the new construction would be used for sales space for home building and related items. The area will also house garden and lawn items.

The 30,250 square foot addition will be located at the store's 3111 Cuthbert St. location.

Midland County was issued a permit for $16,700 for the addition of an office and warehouse facility at Fairview Cemetery.

The City of Midland was issued a permit to add a partition at the Public Safety Building, 404 E. Texas St. The permit amounted to $1,000.

Abco Reveals Plans For 106 New Homes

The recently organized firm of Abco Homes, Inc. is nearing completion of its first six Midland residences. Another six homes are slated to be started soon and plans call for at least 100 homes to be built in Midland during coming months.

The first six homes, all in the $40,000 to $45,000 range, are located on Emerson Drive, north of Goddard. Completions are scheduled in approximately one month to six weeks, according to Fred Estep, president of Abco Homes.

Gene Abbott of Midland was recently named secretary of the new firm. He also serves as chairman of the board for Abbott Building Company which specializes in steel buildings for commercial and industrial use.

Joining Estep and Abbott in managing the home-construction corporation is Ric Abbott, vice president. He attended Angelo State University and has six years of experience with Abbott Building Company prior to formation of the home-building firm.

Estep came to this area from Hamilton, Ohio, and has a quarter-century of experience in residential and commercial construction and development.

The company also is involved in the residential development of the new $100 million University Gardens in Odessa, with six homes under way north of Highway 80.

Signal Subsidiary Proposes Uranium Facility In Texas

LOS ANGELES — The Garrett Corp., a subsidary of the Signal Companies, will submit a proposal to the Energy Research and Development Administration to build an $800 million uranium enrichment plant in Texas.

The plan calls for formation of a separate corporate entity to construct and operate the plant. Two Texas utilities, Texas Utilities, Inc., and Houston Lighting & Power Co., are cooperating in the plan and would expect to contract for the plant output for use as fuel in nuclear-powered generating plants.

Several energy oriented firms have been invited to participate in the project.

The plant would use the gas centrifuge method and be constructed in modular form. The initial module of approximately 350,000 units per year capacity would be activated in 1981. Later modules would be added to achieve a capacity of 3 million units per year by the last half of the 1980's.

Site of the new plant has not been disclosed.

Former Oklahoma Governor's Widow Ends Long Mystery

PONCA CITY, Okla. (AP)— Lyde Marland — widow and former stepdaghter of former Oklahoma Gov. E. W. Marland, has returned to Ponca City, ending a 22-year-old mystery.

Mrs. Marland got into her 1949 Studebaker in May 1953 —12 years after the death of her husband — and left town. She hadn't made a public appearance since.

Mrs. Marland, now 75, is living at the Jens-Marie Hotel, carefully avoiding publicity, venturing from her room only occasionally.

"I saw her in the lobby yesterday," a hotel employe said. "But she doesn't come out often." She has refused interviews and avoided photographers.

"She said she wanted to get away from her family," the owner of the hotel said. "She wasn't ill, she just seemed like a person who wanted to live a normal, happy life."

Mrs. Marland and her brother, George, were adopted by oilman E. W. Marland and his first wife when they were children. When the first Mrs. Marland died in 1926, Marland had the adoption for Lyde cancelled and married her. She was 28 and he was 54.

Grateful Patron Leaves Postal Tip

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — A grey-haired lady who said postal workers "have been so nice to me" gave the post office here a $10 bill for the mailman who delivers her Social Security check.

Postal clerk Daurice Shelven says she tried to explain to the unidentified elderly woman Thursday that the post office "doesn't accept gratuities," but the woman refused to take the money back.

Teamsters Win In Farm Ballot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A new three-year contract between Teamsters' farm workers and 135 California and Arizona growers has been signed after the farm workers ratified the agreement by a 4-1 margin.

The contract provides a 25 per cent pay hike and would boost the minimum wage of farm workers. Workers voted 8,552 to 2,159 Friday to accept the contract, which United Farm Workers leader Cesar Chavez called a "sweetheart" agreement.

The contract covers 30,000 workers in California and Arizona and appears to give the Teamsters an edge over the UFW in upcoming elections that likely will take place later this year on these same ranches when the new California farm labor law takes effect.

British Corporation Faces Biggest Loss

By COLIN CHAPMAN
The London Observer

LONDON — Confidential estimates circulating within the British Steel Corporation indicate that it is headed towards the largest corporate loss in business history.

Revised predictions, updated since British Steel disclosed that it was losing money at the rate of $10 million a week, indicate that next year the Corporation will edge out the National Coal Board ($8 million) and the American Penn Central Railroad ($450 million) from the world record.

The projections, based on forecasts on sales and cost trends from British Steel's six divisions, show that the $10 million-a-week loss figure, which itself represented a doubling of estimates earlier this year, is escalating fast and, if unchecked, will reach $1.2 billion.

Ironically, British Steel will announce that last year it made a profit of around $200 million. But chairman Sir Monty Finniston is expected to make no bones about the problems ahead and announce that the Corporation is embarking on yet another massive costcutting exercise.

At present British Steel is striving to save some $700 million. About $2.5 million would stem from a plan of closures and layoffs agreed with the unions.

The projection now hints that this $700 million target will not be met, and there may be a shortfall of some $150 million.

British Steel executives argue, with some bitterness, that the projected losses would be nowhere near so high if the corporation had been allowed to proceed with its own development plan rather than have the high cost Beswick Review forced upon it by the former Industry Secretary Tony Benn.

Unlike other nationalized industries in serious deficit, British Steel cannot foist its losses on the customer.

This leaves only further cuts in the wage bill, now running at about $2 billion a year, giving BSC workers an annual average wage of about $11,000.

U.S. Postal Service Weighed Down By Heavy Sack Of Debts

By HOWARD ANGIONE
Associated Press Writer

With difficult and drawn-out labor negotiations as a backdrop, the U.S. Postal Service is weighed down by a heavy sack of debts as it struggles unsuccessfully for financial independence.

Losing-Money Mail Game

Item: In the last fiscal year, the Postal Service lost money at the rate of $2.3 million a day. But those were the good old days. Now, officials estimate that losses are $8 million a day and will only increase until postal rates can be raised.

Item: Postal executives say their attempts to raise more money through higher rates are held up by regulatory red tape. Intertwined in the tape is a dispute over how to divide the burden between the first-class rate, which can yield more than $600 million per year for every one-cent increase, and other types of mail. Meanwhile volume for first-class, the traditional moneymaker, fell slightly last year.

Item: Postal workers are resisting service attempts to improve the efficiency of mail carriers. The letter carriers' union says the service's so-called Kokomo Plan is a speed-up designed by computers that don't take human factors into consideration. They say they'll stage a work stoppage if the service doesn't eliminate it. Strikes by postal workers are illegal.

In short, Mr. Zip has been zapped.

The Postal Service was formed in July 1971 as the result of a hope in Congress that a quasi-private business could escape bureaucratic doldrums, avoid political patronage hangups and approach a break-even point by 1984.

At first, revenue from postage plus the subsidies that Congress authorized to ease the transition to self-sufficiency came close to covering expenses. In fiscal 1973, the Postal Service cut its losses to just under $13 million, down about $162 million in its first year of existence. But losses mushroomed to $438 million in fiscal 1974 and to about $850 million in fiscal 1975.

Inflation 'Sinks' Mail

Among the major reasons cited for the losses are the energy crisis, inflation, delays in rate increases and labor settlements.

The service is going broke faster and faster as revenue from postage and subsidies trails operating expenses.

It has kept from collapsing by borrowing money — $1 billion for operating expenses in the past 13 months — and by dipping into cash that it received when it took over from the old Post Office Department. As a result, its equity — the difference between what it owns and what it owes — has fallen from $1.7 billion to $435 million.

Postal executives say the effect of inflation is most noticeable in the salary budget which accounts for 85 per cent of the more than $12 billion that the service spends each year.

Unlimited Allowances

An unlimited cost-of-living allowance in postal union contracts has, at six-month intervals since the fall of 1973, provided employes with one cent more per hour for each 0.4 of a point increase in the Consumer Price Index. Weekly salaries today are thus $25.19 higher than they would have been if the cost of living had remained constant.

Postal executives calculate that in fiscal 1975 the cost-of-living raises added $444 million beyond their original allowances for inflation.

The average clerk, postman or pickup truck driver now makes about $13,500 per year at top scale, plus fringe benefits.

Present union contracts covering more than 600,000 of the 700,000-member work force expire this weekend. Unions are seeking additional raises and the retention of the cost-of-living feature. They are also intent on retaining a no-layoff clause.

Postal Service attempts to eliminate or modify the no-layoff clause are part of their over-all attempts to improve productivity.

Another of the attempts to improve productivity is the "Kokomo Plan," first tested in Kokomo, Ind., and now operating in Portland, Ore. Postal officials deny that the computerized route analysis involved is a speed-up, and defend the plan as an attempt to organize routes more efficiently.

The failure to meet some earlier productivity goals has added to the service's financial problems. Many of them involved 21 bulk mailing centers being built in strategic locations to sort fourth-class parcels and serve as transfer points for second-and third-class mail.

Completion dates have been set back more than six months, to late fall and early spring, but when the centers do begin operating the Postal Service hopes that the mechanized parcel sorting equipment inside will save money. Although some critics have doubts, postal officials say they are confident that the centers will also help them improve service and regain some of the parcel business that has been lost to competitors such as United Parcel Service.

Postal executives say they remain committed to productivity gains that do not reduce service, but stress that they also need more revenue.

Fed Subsidizes

The Postal Service receives $920 million a year in subsidies designed to compensate it for "public services" such as keeping unprofitable offices open. It also receives about $600 million in subsidies designed to enable certain mailers such as newspapers, magazines and nonprofit organizations to adjust gradually to the full impact of recent rate increases. These subsidies are to decrease gradually as the difference narrows between the established rates and the amounts these organizations actually pay.

On the rate issue, the Postal Service is feuding with the Postal Rate Commission, an agency set up to watch over the Postal Service the way that public service commissions regulate utilities.

The Postal Service says the commission is too slow — it has not made a final decision on a September 1973 rate increase request that included the 10-cent rate for first-class. That rate has applied on a "temporary" basis since March 1974, and higher rates can't be charged until a final decision is made on the pending request.

The commission contends that the major reason for its slowness is the Postal Service's bookkeeping system, which makes it difficult for outsiders to determine whether the Postal Service is spending its money efficiently.

The commission also contends that the bookkeeping makes it difficult to determine whether rates for each class of mail truly reflect the costs of handling.

The administrative law judge who presided at the hearings before the rate commission on the 1973 rate request did his own analysis of postal bookkeeping and determined that it primarily reflect the costs of handling other types: magazines, newspapers, advertising circulars and parcels.

He recommended that the rate for eight per ounce, instead of the requested 10 cents, and that rates in other classes should be higher.

The Postal Service says it is improving its bookkeeping, but has asked the full five-member commission not to accept the administrative judge's recommendation.

Rates Impact

Postal executives say any rate changes must take into account the impact that rate increases would have on mail volume.

If rates get too high for parcels, newspapers and magazines, the Postal Service says, it will lose most of this business, particularly in easy-to-deliver areas, where magazines might start their own delivery services. Also lost would be whatever money this mail contributes to overhead. In addition, the Postal Service worries, as long as there is a no-layoff clause in its contracts, it would not be able to compensate for the lost revenue by reducing its payroll.

Ford Chats With Tourists Waiting To See White House

By CARROLL KILPATRICK
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—President Ford walked out of his airconditioned office into the Washington heat Friday to mingle with about 1,000 tourists as they lined the sidewalk back of the south grounds waiting to tour the White House.

"I just had a half hour or so and thought it would be a good idea," the President said.

The tourists thought so, too. One woman was too startled to comment after encountering the President, but most of the others were relaxed and smiling as they shook his hand.

Scores of the visitors had cameras and recorded the event for the folks back home.

"We're from France," one woman said to the President.

A man said he was from Israel. Several others said they were from Michigan.

One tourist introduced the President to a Vietnamese girl, commenting: "She came from Saigon to see you."

A young man asked the President if he was going to get the price of gasoline down, and Ford promised "we'll try."

Half way through the walk from East Executive Avenue to West Executive Avenue, Ford shed his jacket and handed it to an aide. The temperature was in the upper 80s.

Ford frequently asks how many tourists visit the White House, an aide explained. He was told there were 9,000 the day before. "He just decided he would greet those in the line," the aide said. "He gave the staff and Secret Service very little warning."

As far as could be determined, no other President has walked along the lines of people outside the grounds waiting to tour the Executive Mansion.

Even Lyndon Johnson never thought of that way to woo the voters. He frequently marched reporters and guests around the south grounds, inside the fence. Often he would stop at the gate to wave or stick his hands through to shake hands. Once he marched a startled European prime minister to the gate and introduced him to the assembled gawkers.

Ford has said he wants to make it possible for more persons to visit the White House. He has given orders to open it for longer hours during 1976 to accommodate bicentennial visitors.

A visitors waiting area also is to be opened on the Ellipse by the National Park Service.

Mrs. Ford has said she will increase the number of garden tours and make the grounds generally more available to the public. Beginning in April, the gardens and grounds will be open one weekend each month through October. In the past, there usually have been two garden tours a year.

Kennedy Aide Says JFK Personally Vetoed U.S. Involvement In Trujillo Plot

By GEORGE LARDNER JR.
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Kennedy personally ruled out U.S. involvement in the assassination of Rafael Trujillo shortly before the Dominican dictator was killed in May of 1961, according to a former Kennedy White House aide.

Richard Goodwin, who was Kennedy's principal adviser on Latin American affairs, said the late President not only disapproved of U.S. participation in the scheme, but inserted a strong warning against such involvement in a May 1961 cable to the U.S. consul general in the Dominician Republic.

"He said, 'Look, if Trujillo goes, he goes, but why are we pushing that?'" Goodwin recalled of a conversation he had with Kennedy at the time.

The injunction the President laid down in the cable, Goodwin added, stated that the "U.S., as a matter of general policy, cannot condone assassination."

Then an assistant special counsel to the President, Goodwin said he was speaking up publicly now to refute suggestions that John F. Kennedy, who was sworn in as President on Jan. 20, 1961, may have known and even approved of Central Intelligence Agency complicity in efforts to kill foreign leaders.

The evidence Goodwin cited indicated, instead, that high official of the Eisenhower administration had encouraged such undertakings.

In an interview, Goodwin said, for example, that on Jan. 2, 1961, while Eisenhower was still president, the White House's so-called Special Group in charge of covert CIA operations authorized the CIA to turn over several guns to certain Dominican dissidents who were later involved in the Trujillo assassination.

Three .38-caliber revolers and three carbines with accompanying ammunition, it was confirmed by other sources, were handed over to the dissident group.

The Special Group had approved the transfer only on the condition that it take place outside the Dominican Republic—with the understanding that the underground rebels would have to smuggle the guns into the country themselves.

The CIA, however, sent them straight to Ciudad Trujillo (now Santo Domingo) in a diplomatic pouch, Goodwin declared. The guns were turned over to the dissidents with the help of Henry Dearborn, the U.S. consul general there.

Trujillo had a very tight grip on the country, another source said, and the rebels were unable to work out their own method of getting the guns in.

Alluding to the documents he saw as a White House aide, Goodwin said the revolvers and carbines were depicted by the CIA as intended for the personal defense of the dissidents "attendant to their projected efforts to neutralize Trujillo."

Trujillo's assassination 'caught (us) completely by surprise'

According to evidence now in the hands of the Senate Intelligence Committee, the CIA also sent four .45-caliber submachine guns and some grendades to the Dominican Republic, apparently in another diplomatic pouch. The CIA informed the White House on May 13, 1961, that these, too, could be provided to the anti-Trujillo group "for their use in personal defense" if authorization were granted.

Goodwin said he vetoed the suggestion, at Kennedy's instructions, in the same late May cablegram to Consul General Dearborn.

Dearborn, now retired, declined to comment. However, he worked closely with both pro-U.S. dissidents and the CIA at the time. Dearborn, it was learned, doubled as the CIA's unofficial station chief in the Dominican Republic for several months in 1960 when the United States withdrew its diplomatic recognition of the country and called back many of its employes, including CIA personnel.

There is no evidence that the carbines or the revolvers were used when Trujillo was gunned down on May 30, 1961, Goodwin said, but he maintained that the machine guns were sought for that purpose. "They weren't intended for personal defense," he declared.

Another source, who asked not to be named, maintained that the CIA guns, were all sought simply as a token to satisfy the skeptics among them that the United States supported their efforts to overthrow Trujillo.

"There's a difference between overthrow and assassination," this source said. "We never favored (Trujillo's) assassination. As far as I'm concerned, it did not occur to anyone that they would use these weapons" to kill the dictator.

In any case, the United States was evidently not in control of what happened. Goodwin gave this account:

On May 5, 1961, following the Bay of Pigs debacle in mid-April, Kennedy informed the National Security Council that the United States "should not initiate the overthrow of Trujillo" without knowing what government would succeed him.

Informed of that by the State Department on May 17, a puzzled Dearborn replied to Washington that it was "too late" to worry about it since the dissidents' efforts to oust Trujillo had been under way for approximately a year at that point.

The consul general, however, took comfort in a suggestion from the State Department that the rebels might ask in advance for military support from the United States, the Organization of American States and other sister republics such as Venezuela. Dearborn was sent a draft request for troops that selected dissidents might sign at the right moment in the name of "the people of Santo Domingo" and give back to Dearborn to hold for release.

When Dearborn said he would like to give the document to dissidents he trusted for possible future use, however, the State Department balked, apparently worried by now that Trujillo was about to be killed with U.S. encouragement. Word that the CIA had given the dissidents guns and stood ready to produce more had gotten around by then, Goodwin said.

By May 26, following a meeting of the Kennedy administration's Special Group, officials at State proposed sending a cable to Dearborn telling him not even to inform trusted underground leaders of the existence of the draft request for troops. The more important thing, the proposed cable suggested cautiously, was "to disassociate the U.S. from any obvious intervention in Dominican Republic and even more so from any political assassination which might occur."

The CIA agreed to the text. A copy was then sent to the White House for the President's approval and it landed on Goodwin's desk. He said he thought it much too cautious and so did the President who told him to rewrite it in stronger language.

Goodwin said he did so, emphasizing that "we must not run risk of U.S. association with political assassination. This last principle is overriding and must prevail in doubtful situation."

At another point, he said he wrote for Dearborn's

CIA shipped weapons into country in diplomatic pouch guidance that "at the present time we are unable to transfer arms to dissidents. Tell them this is because of our suspicion that method of transfer may be unsafe. In actual fact we feel that the transfer would serve very little purpose and expose the United States to great danger of association with assassination attempts." (The words, "association with," was jotted down by hand over a crossed-out phrase that read "ultimate disclosure of participation in" an assassination attempt.)

The former White House aide said he then took the papes to Kennedy who made the cable stronger, changing it to read, "We must not run sisk of U.S. association with political assassination, since U.S. as a matter of general policy cannot condone assassination."

The last phrase ("since U.S. as a matter of general policy cannot condone assassination"), was handwritten and Goodwin said the writing was either the President's hand or that of a secretary taking dictation from him. "Those are his words," Goodwin said. "I drafted the cablegram at the President's personal instruction and I signed it. But insisted, "we were caught completely by surprise."

Reports to Washington had been saying the assassination was imminent, Goodwin acknowledged, "but we'd gotten a lot of warnings like that. It looked like it was 50-50...Trojillo was hardly a popular leader. He butchered people...If anyone wanted to assassinate him, we didn't object—but not with our help."

The Washington Post reported in March that Dearborn, too, was unaware of just when the assassination might be attempe and so were the conspirators. They were waiting for a night when Trujillo and his driver would head for his country place in San Cristobal without the heavy guard that usually surrounded him.

Although Goodwin described Kennedy's words as a general policy against assassination, it is not know whether the late President ever made it clear to the CIA itself, which continued to be involved in schemes against Castro. Goodwin said, however, that Kennedy consistently disapproved of such proposals in several other conversations on the subject of which Goodwin is aware.

Rain Halts Swimming Meet

Records Fall During Competition

Rain canceled Saturday night's finals of the 28th Annual West Texas Invitational Swim Meet after five events were completed.

It wasn't so much the rain that soaked the area, but the threat of lightning that caused cancellation of the finals.

Records fell almost as fast as the rain in the events that were concluded, with all swimmers in two events bettering the West Texas record.

Midge Hill of the Cincinnati Marlins, set a pool record in the girls 13- to 14-year-old 50-meter freestyle with a 28.749. All swimmers in the race bested the WT record of 31.3.

John Owsiany, also of Cincinnati, beat the West Texas record and set a pool record of 26.78 in the boys 13-14 50 free. All swimmers in this event also bettered the West Texas record of 28.56.

Kimberly Hillen, another speedster on the Marlins squad set a pool record of 28.27 in the girls 15-18 50 free and bettered the West Texas record. Seven of the eight finalists bettered the West Texas mark.

In the boys 15-18 50 free, Scott O'Connor of the Joe Phillips Swim Club of Phoenix, Ariz. won with a 24.90 which bettered the West Texas record and set a new pool mark. He also bettered the state record of 25.12.

Tammie Graef of the Dads Club of Houston, established a state record in the girls 10 & under 100-meter fly with a sparkling 1:18.18. The old mark was 1:18.52.

Gretchen Kock of the City of Midland Swim Team was second in the 10 and under 100 fly with an 18.59, just shy of the old state mark.

In unofficial team standings, the Cincinnati Marlins were in first place, followed by Santa Clara, Mission Viejo, Calif., Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; Dads Club, and City of Midland.

Saturday night's finals will be completed tonight.

The scheduled preliminaries today will be swam as timed finals with the fastest times awarded the first eight places.

The meet started Friday with 29 teams entered. It ends with tonight's events that get under way at 6 p.m., with the morning races starting at 9 a.m.

Going into today's final events, Cincinnati has 318 points. Santa Clara has amassed 218, and third place Mission Viejo 193. The Fort Lauderdale Hall of Fame Swim Team has picked up 158 points, while Dads club has 127.

COM's total for the first two days was 123.

One of the meets featured events will be unreeled shortly after noon. It is the girls 10 and under 200-meter medley relay.

Favored to win the meet are the quartets entered by the City of Midland Swim team and the Mission Viejo Natadores.

The COM team owns the pending national record of 2:28.25. That mark broke the record held by the Mission Viejo crew.

Swimming for COM will be Isabel Torres, Heather Dunbar, Carol Cappadonna, and Gretchen Koch.

Pirates Top Dodgers

Wild Throw Gives Bucs 5-3 Victory

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tom Paciorek's wild throw gave Pittsburgh the tie-breaking run in the ninth inning and Rennie Stennett added a sacrifice fly as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Los Ageles Dodgers 5-3 Saturday night.

Manny Sanguillen opened the ninth against Mike Marshall, 5-7, with a single. Mario Mendoza bunted for a sacrifice and was safe when first baseman Steve Garvey threw wide of the base.

Sanguillen went to third on the play, then scored when Paciorek, the left fielder, recovered the ball and threw wildly past second. Winner Dave Giusti, 4-3, bunted Mendoza to third and he came in on Stennett's fly ball to center.

Sanguillen had singled and scored on Stennett's triple off Don Sutton in the fourth but the Dodgers tied it in the eighth when Garvey doubled, was bunted to third and scored on Bill Buckner's squeeze bunt.

The Dodgers took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on John Hale's bases-loaded single but the Pirates tied it in the third on Dave Parker's bases-loaded single.

Toomay Traded To Buffalo

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboy defensive end Pat Toomay has been traded to the Buffalo Bills of the National Football League for an undisclosed draft choice, the Dallas Times Herald said in today's editions.

Cowboy officials would neither confirm or deny the story Saturday. A team which acquires a player usually is the first to make such announcements.

Toomay has been a starter at end for the Cowboys for two of the four years he has been here after he was the team's sixth round draft choice out of Vanderbilt in 1970.

He played out his option last season after signing a futures contract with Birmingham of the World Football League. The contract was later voided.

Toomay is the second Cowboy player to be traded for a draft choice in the last few days. The Cowboys sent wide receiver Bob Hayes to the San Francisco 49ers for a second round draft choice in 1976 and a third round pick in 1977.

Phils Trip Astros, 1-0

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Larry Christenson pitched a four-hitter and Johnny Oates drove in a fourth-inning run to give the Philadelphia Phillies a 1-0 victory over the Houston Astros Saturday night.

Christenson, 5-1, gave up a fourth-inning single to Greg Gross, a seventh-inning double to Cesar Cedeno and ninth-inning singles by Cedeno and Bob Watson on his way to his fifth straight victory. He struck out seven and walked two.

The Phillies pushed across the deciding run against Larry Dierker, 8-10, when Mike Schmidt walked, moved to third on Garry Maddox' single and scored on a sacrifice fly by Oates.

Midland Sweeps Pair From Jackson Mets

By TED BATTLES

Midland's Cubs swept a doubleheader from the Jackson Mets, 10-0 and 10-6 at Cubs Stadium Saturday night to run their Texas League winning streak to seven straight.

Donnie Moore won the first game with a four-hitter, pitching his second complete shutout of the season and raising his record to 9-4.

The second game, played in a steady drizzle, was tougher to win despite the final score.

Midland finally broke it open with a six-run sixth, but had to score in the fifth to pull into a 4-4 tie. With the rain coming down, it seemed possible that the game could be called at any moment.

At one point in the fifth inning, play was halted while sand was brought to the pitcher's mound to improve the footing.

Bill Huisman singled with one out in the fifth and Bill Droege drove him in with a two-out single to tie at 4-4.

Then in the sixth, Al Montreiul got the winning rally started with a single and retired for pitch-runner Donnie Moore, who later in the inning, came to bat and delivered a two-run single.

A sacrifice, walk to Mike Sember put runners on first and second. Steve Verban grounded to second for what looked like a possible double play but second baseman Dick Harris dropped the throw as Moore scored from second.

After that Bright, pinch-hiter hit Steve Clancy, singled home one run. Huisman singled. And Umfleet knocked in another run. Moore capped the rally with his two-run single.

Gary Junge, who relieved Mike Krukow, got the win in the second game and lefthander Dave Giesel notched a save, coming on in the seventh to quell a six-hit Met rally that produce two runs.

Catcher Greg Collins hit his second home run and went three-for-four to bat in four runs in the opener as Midland salted it away with six first inning runs off Mike Bruhert.

Despite the big lead, it seemed like there was little hope of getting in a complete game as dark clouds closed in, menascingly from the east, south and west.

Still at one point in the game, shortstop Mike Sember took three quick swings in the last of the fourth and gave away his intentions by heading out for his defensive position only to discover there were only two outs.

Few, outside of Stoney Fenney, who was doing the radio broadcast, would have bet that the teams would play the full seven innings, but they did.

Bill Huisman and Mike Umfleet opened the first with singles and Huisman moved to third as Bill Droege grounded into a force at second. Wayne Tyrone bounced to the left of the mound and Bruhert fielded it, but was late with his throw to the plate as Huisman scored all the runs Moore needed.

After that Bill Bright singled to center for another run, Al Montreiul reached on an error and Joe Wallis' single to left plated Tyrone. Sember walked to force in Bright and Jackson Todd, the former OU pitcher, relieved Bruhert.

Collins and Umfleet both singled and it was 6-0. Midland got two more in the third when Sember led off with a triple and Collins followed with his powerful blast in left-center.

In the fourth, it was a double by Bright, a single by Montreiul and an infield force by Wallis that made it 9-0. And in the sixth, Montreiul doubled and scored on singles by Collins and Wallis.

Collins three-for-four night gave the Vanderbilt catcher eight hits in his last 14 at bat to raise his average from .220 to over .270.

Edwards Grabs Lead

Rookie Birdies Last Two Holes

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Rookie Danny Edwards birdied his last two holes for a 69, broke out of the most tightly-packed, massive jam of players the tour has seen in years and took the lead Saturday in the $200,000 Pleasant Valley Golf Classic.

The 24-year-old Edwards put on a fantastic exhibition of scrambling—he one-putted seven holes in a row at one stretch—on his way to a three-round total of 207, six-under-par on the hilly, windswept, 7,119-yard, Pleasant Valley Country Club course.

The wind was a major factor in turning this into probably the tightest race of the season. At one time or another in the third round, eight players either led or shared the lead. At one point, 12 players were locked within one stroke of each other at the top.

"I've been out here for 13 years and in all that time I've never seen anything like this," said Dom Mirandi, the veteran official scorer for the tour.

Edwards finally solved it with his two closing birdies. He hit a seven iron just two inches—one turn of the ball—short of the cup on the 17th hole and jerked a massive yell from the gallery announced at 30,750 with his long, curling putt of about 35 feet on the final hole.

Lee Elder, the second-round leader who has a habit of playing very well in this tournament, Ben Crenshaw, Rod Curl and Mac McLendon were tied for second, one shot back at 208.

McLendon, enjoying his best year as a pro, had a 70, Crenshaw and Curl matched rounds of par 71 and Elder slipped to a 73.

"It was tough trying to figure out what to do with the wind swirling and changing like it was," Elder said.

"With conditions like they were, I can't be dissatisfied with a 71," Crenshaw said.

"With the wind and the rough, getting all those flyers, it was a tough day to play," Curl said.

"The wind kept anybody from shooting a really good score and kept us all bunched up," McLendon said. "The golf course really played tough."

Chuck Courtney, Buddy Allin and George Johnson were at 209, leaving eight players within two strokes—and 13 within three—going into today's final round. Courtney had a 70, Allin and Johnson 72s.

Lee Trevino, who started the day just one shot back, and at one time held a share of the lead, bogeyed two of his last four holes for a 74 and dropped back to 210, three behind but still very much in the race.

In addition to Trevino and Edwards, Elder, Allin, Crenshaw, Johnson, Curl and McLendon all led or shared the lead at least once.

But they couldn't keep pace with Edwards' scrambling act. He one-putted the fourth through the 10th holes—only two of them for birdies—needed only 27 strokes on the huge greens and added clutch second putts of six feet on two holes.

"What I have to learn," Edwards said, "is that you can't expect to hit the ball really well for four days. You're going to have one day where you don't hit it so good and you have to get it up and in.

"That's what I did today. And that's the difference in my position and being four or five shots back."

Yister, Wohlhunter Shine In Durham Track Meet

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Ethiopia's Miruts Yister, winning both distance races, and America's Mark Wohlhuter, with a fast victory at 800 meters, established themselves as strong Olympic contenders Saturday in the United States-Pan African-West German track meet.

World records were set in both the men's and women's mile relays by American and German teams, but the marks were well short of the comparable metric standards. The four-lap relay is usually run at 1,600 meters in international competition.

In team competition, the American men scored 164½ points to outdistance the Germans with 134 and the African nations with 110½.

The women's competition by the West Germans with 131 to 99 for the United States, and 40 for Pan Africa. The combined score gave the West Germans a narrow 265-263½ victory over the Americans.

The record-setting American relay team was patched together Saturday morning because of an injury to Fred Newhouse. Local collegian Ronnie Ray was recruited for the opening leg snd responded with a 46.4 lap.

Robert Taylor kept the team close behind the Germans until Maurice Peoples moved it ahead on the third leg. Stan Vinson anchored in 44.9 seconds to seal the record.

Their time of 3:02.4 bettered the 1966 mark of Trinidad-Tobago by 4-10ths of a second. But it was much slower than the 2:56.1 run by the U.S. Olympic team in 1968 for 1,600 meters, a distance about 12 yards short of a mile.

The same was true of the world mark of 3:30.3 established by the West German women's team of Christiane Krause, Dragmar Fost, Erika Weinstein and Elke Barth. It was well short of the 3:23.0 recorded by East Germany for 1,600 meters in 1972.

A patchwork American men's team set a world record in the mile relay, which is rarely run in international competition. The quartet's time of 3:02.4 bettered the old mark of 3:02.8 set by Trinidad-Tobago.

The leadoff leg was run by Ronnie Ray, a local collegian from North Carolina Central who was recruited after Fred Newhouse pulled a muscle in the open 400 meters Friday.

Ray and Robert Taylor kept the United States close through the first two legs as the Germans led. Maurice Peoples opened the lead for the United States on the third leg, and Stan Vinson ran a 44.9-second anchor leg to overcome the West Germany challenge on the final lap.

International track meets usually have a 1600-meter relay, a distance roughly 15 yards short of a mile. The record for that event is 2:56.1 set by the U.S. Olympic team in 1968 and considered a superior performance to the one Saturday.

Rich Wohlhuter reestablished himself atop the world half milers by running his fastest 800 meters of the year, 1:44.1. Wohlhuter trailed Kenya's John Kiprughat until the final turn when he opened a five yard lead to win almost easily. Utah State's Mark Enyeart dropped out of the race with an apparent minor leg injury, suffering his first defeat of the year.

Ethiopia's Miruts Yifter completed the second leg of a distance double when he won the 5,000 meters in 13:38.8. Yifter's race was a copy of his 10,000 meter victory Friday. He stayed well within himself until the final lap, when he unleashed a blazing kick. His last lap was 56.3 seconds, which would be good for a miler. The distance he ran Saturday is more than three miles.

Madeline Manning Jackson, making a comeback this year, won the women's 800 meters in a brisk 2:01.5. Her time was not the sub-two minute clocking she had hoped for and felt capable of running. But the race's early pace was too slow to allow that fast a time.

Tigers Top Royal Nine

DETROIT (AP) — Aurelio Rodriguez hit reliever Doug Bird's first pitch for a grand-slam home run in the sixth inning Saturday night to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 10-8 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Detroit trailed 7-4 before Ben Oglivie opened the sixth with a double and Willie Horton singled him home. Jack Pierce's single off Marty Pattin and a walk to Leon Roberts then loaded the bases with one out. Bird took the mound and Rodriguez, who had singled for a run in the second inning, blasted his ninth homer of the year and his first career grand slam, a shot off the upper deck facing in right field.

It gave Joe Coleman, 7-12, his fourth consecutive victory. He had given up three runs in the second on a homer by Al Cowens and four more runs in the sixth. Bob Stinson hit a homer in the top of the eighth for Kansas City but Roberts hit one for Detroit in the bottom of the inning.

Padres Ruin Stone's Bid

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Chicago's Steve Stone walked home two runs in the sixth inning, then lost a no-hitter on John Grubb's bunt single in the seventh—San Diego's lone hit—and the Padres beat the Cubs 2-1 Saturday night.

Stone, 7-4, who failed to last the seventh inning, started it by walking pitcher Dave Freisleben and Grubb on four straight pitches apiece. They moved up on Tito Fuentes' sacrifice bunt and Gene Locklear was walked intentionally to load the bases. Stone then walked Dave Winfield and Mike Ivie to force in San Diego's runs.

Pele Injured During Soccer Contest

TORONTO (AP) — New York Cosmos superstar Pele reportedly sustained a "severe left thigh injury," early in the second half of a North American Soccer League game between the Toronto Metros-Crotia and the Cosmos, a Cosmos spokesman said Saturday night.

Toronto won the match 3-0.

Pele reportedly was controlling the ball going downfield towards the Toronto goal when he was accidentally tripped from behind by Toronto's Terry Roe. Play continued while Pele got up slowly and shook off the fall. He remained in the game but was described as "slowed down and ineffective" by the spokesman.

Yankees Take 16-Inning Victory

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Lou Piniella's run-scoring single capped a two-run burst in the bottom of the 16th inning that gave the New York Yankees an 8-7 victory over the Minnesota Twins Saturday night in the completion of a game suspended by a 1 a.m. curfew a week ago in New York after 14 innings.

It preceded the teams' regularly scheduled game.

With the Yanks playing as the "home" team in the suspended game, the Twins got a run in the top of the 16th. Rod Carew singled and stole second, Eric Soderholm was walked intentionally, then pinch-hitter Tom Lunstedt looped a hit to right-center field, putting Minnesota ahead 7-6.

But in the bottom of the 16th, singles by Roy White, Thurman Munson and Graig Nettles tied it against Tom Burgmeier, 4-6. Then Piniella lined his game-winner to right.

Minnesota had scored four runs in the top of the ninth in New York, but the Yanks came back with three in the bottom of the ninth to tie the game 6-6 and send it into extra innings.

Trailing 3-2 in the ninth, the Twins' Danny Thompson got a leadoff double off Catfish Hunter, Dan Ford beat out an infield hit off Dick Tidrow and Carew greeted Sparky Lyle with a run-scoring single.

John Briggs' bunt single loaded the bases and Tony Oliva, who had hit a home run in the eighth inning, singled to put the Twins on top 4-3. Doc Medich then yielded a two-run single to Larry Hisle.

In the bottom of the ninth, Jim Mason hit a leadoff homer off Jim Hughes. Tom Johnson replaced Hughes and one out later, Rich Coggins also homered. Rick Dempsey then singled, took second on Roy White's grounder and scored the tying run on Thurman Munson's single.

Seaver Cops 14th Win Over Braves

NEW YORK (AP) — Tom Seaver scattered seven hits and Ed Kranepool drove in three runs, leading the New York Mets to a 5-4 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday.

Seaver, 14-5, became the first 14-game winner in the National League this season, striking out six batters to raise his lifetime total to 1,999 strikeouts. Only 26 other pitchers have reached the 2,000 plateau in major league history.

In the Mets' half of the first, Felix Millan singled, hitting in his 12th straight game, went to third on a single by Kranepool and scored on Rusty Staub's single.

Atlanta made it 2-1 in the third when Marty Perez singled, went to third on Evans' single and scored on May's bouncer.

Millan was hit by Bruce Dal Canton's pitch in the third and scored on Kranepool's double. The Mets broke the tie in the fifth on Kranepool's RBI bouncer, then scored two runs in the seventh on a double by Wayne Garrett and Kranepool's run-scoring single.

Murcer Powers Homer For Victory

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Bobby Murcer belted a two-run homer and Willie Montanez drilled a tie-breaking, two-run single, powering the San Francisco Giants to a 5-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Saturday.

Murcer's homer, following a first-inning single by Derrel Thomas, gave the Giants a 2-0 lead off Lynn McGlothen, 10-7. The homer was Murcer's 11th, one more than he hit all of last season with the New York Yankees.

The Cardinals tied the game in the top of the third off winner John Montefusco, 8-4. Doubles by Lou Brock, Willie Davis and Ted Simmons' produced two runs for the Cardinals.

The Giants went ahead to stay in the bottom of the inning. Thomas led off with a walk and singles by Murcer and Gary Matthews loaded the bases. Montanez then lined his two-run single to left-center.

Kelly's Big Clout Gives Chisox Win

CHICAGO (AP) — Pat Kelly's grand slam homer in the second inning powered the Chicago White Sox to a 4-2 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday in a nationally televised game.

The homer was the fifth of the stason for Kelly and came off loser Bill Travers, 4-4, who did not yield an earned run.

Bill Melton opened the second by reaching first on third baseman Don Money's error. Travers got the next two batters on easy fly balls but Jerry Hairston kept the inning alive by beating out a single to deep short. Brian Downing walked, filling the bases and Kelly followed with his first career grand slam.

Jesse Jefferson, 2-4, was the starter and winner but needed help in the sixth inning—first from Dave Hamilton, then from Rich Gossage. Gossage recorded his 14th save of the year.

Jefferson yielded George Scott's 17th homer in the fourth inning and the Brewers added a run in the fifth on a double by Sixto Lezcano, an infield out and a sacrifice fly by Gorman Thomas.

Jefferson issued a walk to open the sixth, and after he got Scott to fly out, Hamilton came in and fanned Darrell Porter. Hamilton then walked Bob Darwin, and Gossage came in and got designated hitter Hank Aaron on strikes.

Double plays twice blunted Milwaukee threats. Money opened the game by drawing a walk but Robin Yount hit into a double play. Scott then singled, stole second and went to third on Downing's throwing error. Porter grounded out to end the inning.

Jefferson did not allow another hit until the start of the fourth when Scott homered. Powetr followed with a single to right, only to have Darwin hit into a double play.

After Kelly's bases-loaded homer, Bucky Dent and Ken Henderson both singled. Tom Hausman relieved Travers and ended the inning by getting Deron Johnson to bounce into a force play. Hausman went the rest of the way for the Brewers, giving up only two hits. Carlos May had a harmless single in the third and Henderson doubled to open a troublesome fourth.

The victory was the fourth in the last five games for the White Sox as Gossage struck out six in the 3 1-3 innings he worked.

Hawks Won't Be Peddled

ATLANTA (AP) — Negotiations toward the sale of controlling interest in the Atlanta Hawks to an Atlanta businessman have been terminated and the team will not be sold, the National Basketball Association club said Saturday.

The businessman, Simon S. Selig Jr., led a group of investors who announced in June that they intended to purchase the team.

Since that time the Hawks have been hit with a $400,000 fine by the NBA for a 1972 draft violation and have lost their top two 1975 draft picks to Denver of the rival American Basketball Association.

A statement released by Selig and the Hawks' ownership said "negotiations had been completely harmonious and open, including the disclosure of the potentioal action of the NBA in the Julius Erving case."

The Hawks were fined for signing Erving prior to the NBA draft in 1972, but Erving also eventually made his way to the ABA and plays for the New York Nets.

The Hawks had the first and third NBA first-round draft picks this year and chose David Thompson of North Carolina State and Marvin Webster of Morgan State. Both were signed by the Nuggets.

During the past month, Selig had denied rumors that the negotiations had failed, but on Saturday he said only, "We plan on supporting the Hawks in every possible way as fans."

The Hawks' statement said team ownership now consists of former President Tom G. Cousins, John W. Wilcox Jr. and President M. B. "Bud" Seretean.

Seretean, a businessman who recently bought a minority interest in the team, said, "I have moved ahead with my purchase of an equity in the Hawks. I am confident that we are progressing in a satisfactory manner toward an exciting and winning team despite our recent draft-pick losses."

Expos Trip Cincy, 4-2

MONTREAL (AP) — Nate Colbert singled home two runs in the eighth inning, leading the Montreal Expos to a 4-2 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds Saturday.

A single by Pete Mackanin, a walk to Jerry Morales and a hit by Barry Foote loaded the bases for Colbert's tie-breaking single up the middle.

The Reds had tied the score 2-2 in the eighth on Joe Morgan's home run, his 14th of the season.

The Expos made it 2-0 in the second when Colbert reached second on third baseman Pete Rose's two-base throwing error. Colbert went to third on an infield out and scored an unearned run on Pepe Frias' sacrifice fly to center.

Morgan drew a leadoff walk in the Cincinnati sixth, stole second, took third on Johnny Bench's hit and scored as Dan Driessen grounded into a double play.

U.S. WOMEN'S OPEN— Post Captures Tie For Lead

NORTHFIELD, N.J. (AP) — Sandra Post of Canada bogeyed the 18th hole and slipped into a tie for the lead with charging Sandra Palmer and Sally Little after Saturday's third round of the $55,000 U.S. Women's Open golf championship.

At 224 going into today's final round was 18-year-old amateur Nancy Lopez of Roswell, N.M., and pros Jo Anne Carner and Debbie Austin.

Miss Lopez started the day tied with Miss Post for the lead but skied to a five-over-par 77—224, eight over par on the 6,165-yard Atlantic City Country Club course.

Defending champion Sandra Haynie and rookie pro Amy Alcott finished the third round at 225, in good position to challenge in today's final round of the 72-hole event worth $9,000 to the winner.

Miss Post, 27, shot a third-round 76, four over par, as the 42 pros and amateurs still in the field battled strong winds from the nearby Atlantic Ocean and struggled on the rock-hard greens.

Miss Palmer, the leading money winner on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour, fired a one-under 71, only the second sub-par effort of the tournament.

Miss Palmer, a 34-year-old Texan, started the day five strokes back of the leaders. She played the front nine in par-37 then sliced a stroke off regulation coming home for her 71. She had two bogeys and three birdies on the back nine in charging into contention while the other leaders faltered.

Both Miss Lopez, the U.S. Girls' junior champion who is trying to become the second amateur in the history of the Open to win the title, and Miss Little experienced problems on the 515-yard, par-five 18th hole.

Miss Lopez missed a six-foot birdie putt that would have given her a share of the lead, and Miss Little three-putted from the fringe for a bogey.

Miss Post hit her drive off tht 18th tee into the deep right rough and it took her three more shots to reach the green. She placed a 20-foot chip shot two feet from the pin and holed it to save a share of first place.

"My tee shot was so bad that I just had to be careful that I didn't make a seven," Miss Post said. "It was dumb. When you make a mistake like that on this course it will just eat you up."

She added, however, that putting was her big problem.

"I had half a dozen good birdie chances but I couldn't drop anything," she lamented.

"I really had been struggling," said Miss Palmer, who described the short but tricky Atlantic City course as the hardest Open layout she has played.

"When you get in the rough here you have no chance," she said. "You pray a lot."

Miss Palmer, a former homecoming queen and cheerleader at North Texas State, said today's winner would have to sacrifice being aggressive. "You have to try to make pars on this course and hope every once in a while you make a birdie. Every hole is a struggle."

Miss Little, a regular on the U.S. tour who plays out of Palm Springs, Calif., shot an 80 in Thursday's opening round after finishing triple-bogey, bogey, bogey. "I had no confidence after that," she said.

But a 70, the first sub-par round of the tourament, on Friday gave her a big boost. "That did it," she said. "I'm ready to go out and get it over with right now."

Miss Little said she was not surprised at the high scores. "It's an Open," she said, "and in an Open, they want scores to be high."

Kathy Whitworth, recently inducted into the LPGA Hall of Fame, shot a 75—227, only four strokes off the pace in her bid to win her first Open in an otherwise illustrious career.

South Africans Lose In Davis Cup Play

By The Associated Press

South Africa was eliminated from 1975 Davis Cup tennis competition Saturday when Chile took an unbeatable 3-0 lead in the best-of-five series in the American Zone final.

South Africa had won the crown in 1974 by default when India refused a final date because of South Africa's apartheid policy. Several other teams had declined to meet South Africa in earlier rounds.

This year, the Davis Cup Nations had met on several occasions to discuss a move spearheaded by India to oust South Africa because it was disruptive to competition. However, there was opposition to banning a nation on politics alone.

The issue was resolved for the remainder of this year, at least, in Santiago, Chile, when the doubles team of Jaime Fillol and Patricio Cornejo beat Frew McMillan and Ray Moore 7-5, 6-2, 6-4.

Fillol and Cornejo each had won singles matches on Friday. Two singles matches, both meaningless, must be played Sunday before Chile meets the winner of the European Group A final.

Spain led one European Group A semifinal series and Sweden led the other.

Cornejo, a 30-year-old Davis Cup veteran, was the star of the doubles performance in the capital's jammed National Tennis Stadium. He never lost his service, and many of his powerful and sometimes violent serves left both McMillan and Moore standing.

Fillol didn't lose service until the third set, but the Chileans simply overpowered the South Africens with hard service and precise shots to the base lines.

"I don't think I've ever played a worse match," said McMillan. "I just had no control. The Chileans played well, but Cornejo was at his best."

South African non-playing captain Claude Lister said simply: "The Chilean team played too well for us."

Cornejo was to meet Moore and Fillol was to confront Bernie Mitton in today's remaining singles matches.

Even though they are meaningless, Lister said: "We are still going to try to win."

Spain, playing in Barcelona, took a 2-1 lead over Romania Saturday after Manuel Orantes and Juan Gisbert beat Ilie Nastase and Ion Tiriac 3-6, 4-6, 6-3, 7-5, 6-3. The two nations had won one singles match each Saturday.

Sweden had a 2-0 lead on singles going into Saturday's doubles match in Moscow, but bowed to the Soviet Union. Alex Metreveli and Timurez Kakuliya kept the Soviets in the running with a 6-1, 6 -4, 8-6 victory over Bjorn Borg and Ove Bengston, according to Tass, the official Soviet news agency.

In Prague, Czechoslovakia took an unbeatable 3-0 lead over Hungary in the European Zone B final when Jan Kodes and Jiri Hrebec teamed for a 6-3, 6-3, 6-4 triumph over Balasz Taroczy and Robert Machan.

Orioles Sweep 2 From A's

BALTIMORE (AP) — Ellie Hendricks and Ken Singleton drove in two runs apiece to lead Baltimore to a 5-1 victory over the Oakland A's Saturday, giving the Orioles a sweep of their twi-night doubleheader.

Baltimore won the opener 3-2 on Lee May's homer and Brooks Robinson's run-scoring single in the fourth inning.

The A's got to Ross Grimsley, 6-11, for a run in the top of the fourth when Bert Campaneris walked, moved to third on two grounders and scored on Reggie Jackson's single. Grimsley needed ninth-inning relief help from Jim Palmer.

Singleton hit his ninth homer of the year in the third inning, then Hendricks drilled a two-run single off Jim Perry, 4-8, to trigger a four-run fourth in the nightcap. Mark Belanger's single and Singleton's grounder drove in the other two runs in the fourth.

In the first game, Jackson's 20th homer of the year off rookie Paul Mitchell, 1-0, gave the A's a 2-1 lead in the top of the fourth. But May hit his 16th homer and fourth in three games off Vida Blue, 12-8, to tie it in the bottom of the inning, then Don Baylor walked, stole second and came home on Robinson's single to left.

Baylor had doubled in the second and scored Baltimore's first run on a single by Bobby Grich. Mitchell, pitching a five-hitter in his third major league appearance and his second start, allowed a run in the third when Campaneris doubled and scored on a triple by Bill North.

Soviet, U.S. Ends Up In Big Brawl

CALI, Colombia (AP)-The spirit of detente between the American and Soviet water polo teams ended Saturday night with a brawl that followed the teams' 4-4 tie at the World Aquatic Championships.

The Americans, who have never beaten the Russian water polo team in major international competition, held 3-0 and 4-3 leads, but were severely deflated when Alexandr Dreval scored the tying goal with five seconds remaining.

After the teams played the last five seconds and the Americans, playing short one man, barely missed a desperation heave with one second left, a swinging free-for-all ensued in front of the Russian net. It took nearly 30 seconds to restore order in the water.

Battle Far From Over

Discrimination Against Women On Way Out

By TOM SEPPY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sex discrimination against women in the nation's schools and colleges will be banned officially Monday but, according to groups involved in the controversy, the battle is far from over.

Regulations implementing Title IX of the Omnibus Education Act of 1972 go into effect. They prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex in 16,000 school districts, 2,700 institutions of higher education and educational associations that receive federal aid.

The regulations apply to a wide variety of educational areas such as recruitment, hiring, admissions, housing and scholarships. But the section on athletics brought the most discussion from the colleges and the women's groups, with some male athletic officials claiming Title IX will bring an end to big-time college athletics.

During the past few weeks, there was an unsuccessful move to reject the regulations in toto and return them to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for rewriting.

After that effort failed, opponents of the regulations—including the National Collegiate Athletic Association—proposed amendments designed to safeguard revenue-producing sports such as basketball and football.

Rep. James G. O'Hara, D-Mich., introduced a proposal two weeks ago and Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., introduced a similar one last Tuesday. No further action has been taken although hearings can be expected in the fall.

"We're not going to roll over and die," said Kay Hutchcraft, acting director of the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, one of the major proponents of the regulations. "We will anticipate from the latest action that there will be further attempts to make changes in the athletic portions of the new regulations."

She said the AIAW believes the majority of the institutions affected will comply with the law.

"We finally have a set of regulations that can go into effect, yet we are still concerned about further attempts to limit those regulations," he said. "It puts our people in a huge quandry."

An NCAA spokesman said colleges must act as expeditiously as possible to implement the regulations, although secondary and postsecondary schools have three years to comply and elementary schools one year.

"In the area of athletic scholships, we may see some immediate changes," he said. "We may see a flood of applications in the fall on the part of women."

He said the NCAA has a possible lawsuit under consideration but that no final decision has been made.

School systems and colleges are not required to spend the same amount of money on athletic programs for women as they spend on those for men. But the HEW regulations say that equal opportunities must be provided for both sexes.

The test the government will use includes whether women get a fair share of monetary support for their sports prosalaries and scholarships.

The NCAA has taken the position that the Title IX requirement, even if it does not require equal spending for women and men sports programs, will drain the big-time men's football and basketball programs of a large proportion of their revenues.

Nevertheless, an Associated Press survey of colleges during the past few weeks indicates most schools are preparing to comply with the regulations if they have not done so already.

For instance, a Stanford University spokesman believes the school has complied with the requirements of the regulations, may have exceeded them and could serve as a model for other institutions.

"We planned ahead and we merged our men's and women's departments in March, so all sports programs of the university, including intercollegiate, club sports, intramurals and physical education now are under one department," said publicist Gary Cavalli.

Intramurals and physical education have been co-ed for the last couple of years, he said. Another change is that there will be one head coach for both men's and women's teams such as tennis, basketball and swimming.

This year, for the first time, women will be given athletic scholarships. There will be at least nine, including tennis, swimming and golf. The university will pay for the scholarships until a separate fund raising group is organized—like the Stanford Buck Club, which raises money for men's athletic scholarships.

Betsy Rawls Named Tournament Director

NORTHFIELD, N.J. (AP) — Betsy Rawls, a four-time U.S. Open winner and veteran of 25 years of pro golf, has been named tournament director of the Ladies Professional Golf Association.

Miss Rawls, an LPGA Hall of Famer who collected more than $300,000 in official earnings during her career, announced her appointment Saturday after she failed to make the cut for the final two rounds of the Open at the Atlantic City Country Club.

"I haven't been playing very well for the past two or three years," she said. "I'm getting old, and you lose motivation. You really shouldn't be playing."

Miss Rawls, 47, of Spartanburg, S.C., has collected only $1,662 in 14 events this year.

Her appointment is effective immediately and her first tournament as director will be the George Washington Classic at Horsham, Pa., next week.

She said she had no illusions of ending her playing career with a victory in the 1975 Open, but playing the 18th hole in Friday's second round, she said: "I could hardly hold back the tears."

Miss Rawls joins Ray Volpe, who officially begins his job Monday as the LPGA's first commissioner, in an effort to upgrade the status and purses of the women's pro golf tour.

The Open, sponsored by the U.S. Golf Association, is worth $55,000, with $8,000 to the winner.

Cowboys' Lilly Calls It Career

Leaves After 14 Years As Doomsday Defense Leader

DALLAS (AP) — Bob Lilly, the core of the Dallas Cowboys' "Doomsday Defense" for the past 14 seasons, announced his retirement Saturday saying that to continue playing would risk permanent injury.

"It's kind of sad. I'll tell you what it reminds me of. When I went off to college . . . leaving home," Lilly told the Dallas Times Herald in revealing that he will not report with other veterans to the Cowboys training camp today at Thousand Oaks, Calif.

Lilly called a 6 p.m. CDT news conference Saturday where he announced his decision.

The 6-foot-5, seven-time All-Pro tackle said his decision was influenced by recent medical findings that he risked permanent injury—perhaps paralysis—if he continued to play with bone spurs on his neck.

"It didn't take much time to make my decision after that," Lilly said. "The chances are probably remote, but they do exist.

"There was no question that the pain would come back," said the oft-injured Lilly. "I was prepared for that. The possibility of permanent damage . . . I wasn't prepared for that."

Before the medical reports, Cowboys Head Coach Tom Landry had urged Lilly to return for another season. Once Landry learned the dangers, he recommended that his one-time superstar quit.

Before the injuries took their toll, Lilly, 35, played in 196 consecutive regular season games. He was an All-American at Texas Christian University and was the first draft choice ever of the Cowboys franchise in 1961.

Lilly said there were times last season when he suspected his career was almost over.

"I remember the Washington game last year," he said. "Duane Thomas ran by me twice. Plays that I never would have missed two or three years ago. And there I was still tangled up with the guy across from me."

Landry said Lilly was the best lineman he ever saw.

"I don't think Bob ever was aware how good a player he was or how valuable he was," Landry said.

Lilly led the Cowboys to a Super Bowl victory over Miami in 1971. The Cowboys also played in eight consecutive NFL playoff games with Lilly anchoring the line.

Club President Tex Schramm said Lilly was more representative of the first Cowboys era than any player.

"He was our first draft choice, our first superstar," Schramm said. "His growth to greatness was representative of and symbolic of ours.

"It's brought home that when Bob leaves you've moved into a different era," Schramm said. "You've closed one and started another."

Telly's Pop Among Hollywood Favorites

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Telly's Pop, the first horse owned by actor Telly Savalas, and Stained Glass are among the favorites for today's $137,480 Hollywood Juvenile Stakes at Hollywood Park.

Telly's Pop was purchased last year by Savalas and motion picture producer Howard W. Koch for $6,500. Now the 2-year-old thoroughbred can win $79,000 in one race. A winner twice earlier this year, who will be ridden by Francisco Mena, Telly's Pop is a 7-2 choice.

Stained Glass, already a triple stakes winner, will be ridden by Laffit Pincay Jr. and is expected to go off as the favorite. The early line lists him at 5-2.

With Finley As Foe, Bowie Must Be Okay

Battle Scene

By Jed Battles

If Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn needed a recommendation for a second term, we can't think of a better one than the one furnished by the people who were against him.

Leading the opposition were Oakland A's owner Charles O. Finley and New York Yankee owner Charles Steinbrenner.

Steinbrenner was convicted last year for illegal political contributions and the two year suspension Bowie imposed upon him was tougher than that levied by the judicial system.

And anybody who has Finley against him has got to be doing something right.

• • •

Here's an owner who held Manager Dick Williams to the letter of his contract after he resigned following the 1973 World Series, yet refused to live up to the terms of a contract signed with Jim "Catfish" Hunter.

• • •

He's the same fellow who fired second second baseman Mike Andrews after two costly errors in the '73 series and Kuhn is the only thing that stood between Mike and the childish injustice of it all.

As commissioners go nowadays, we suppose Bowie has done as good a job as any. Most of the criticism of the czar's office stems from a comparison with the dictatorial regime of Kennesaw Mountain Landis, baseball's first commissioner.

The office isn't the same as it was when Landis was appointed. Times have changed and as far as most of the owners are concerned, Bowie apparently is doing the job for which he was hired.

The commissioner no longer has the "no appeal" ruling powers he was blessed with in Landis' day and Landis' original successor A. B. "Happy" Chandler discovered this back in the days after World War II when he assumed he could operate the same way as the white-maned judge.

When Landis took over, it was following the 1919 Black Sox scandal. His job was to raise the game above any shadow of suspicion. His authority, from all appearances, was complete. A decision from Landis was beyond question. In truth he was a Czar.

For years Bing Crosby was denied ownership in a major league team simply because he had horse racing connections.

• • •

There could be no such thing as a Ron LeFlore in baseball during the Landis regime. A player who had done prison time would have been unthinkable. In fact, you'd better beware of whom you associated with off the field.

• • •

It's a different job today. The commissioner's punitive powers are limited. If there's an area left for criticism, it has to be in public relations and promotion and a commissioner too flamboyant in either area would soon run into trouble with the owners, who prefer that the game sell itself.

Gamble On Tire Change Pays Off For Fittipaldi

SILVERSTONE, England (AP) — Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil took a gamble on a tire change Saturday and won the British Grand Prix auto race while the rest of the cars on the rainswept Silverstone track skidded and crashed.

No one was injured seriously in the crackups of 11 cars which occurred during a downpour before any drivers other than Fittipaldi pitted to put on rain tires.

Fittipaldi, leading after 54 laps, swung into the pits for a tire change and had his McLaren back on the track moments later. He steered past two pileups and finished the 56th lap alone before the red flag stopped the race.

Carlos Pace of Brazil, in a Brabham, was declared the runner-up and Jody Scheckter of South Africa, in a Tyrrell Ford, was third.

Both were involved in mishaps. Pace was not hurt was Scheckter was one of five drivers who were. He suffered a strained wrist.

In the two major crashes, Pace and Tom Pryce of Britain, also in a UOP Shadow, suffered slight neck injuries and Tony Brise of Britain, in an Embassy Hill, suffered cuts and bruises.

Other drivers who crashed but escaped injury were Mark Donohue, Media, Pa., in a Penske March; Wilson Fittipaldi, brother of the winner, in a Copersucar; Vittorio Brambilla of Italy, March Ford; James Hunt of Britain, Hesketh; Jochen Mass of West Germany, McLaren; and John Watson of Britain, Surtees.

Sugihara Wins

ONO, JAPAN (AP) — Teruo Sugihara, a veteran Japanese pro, won the he Kansai Open Golf tournament by firing rounds of 71 and 69 Saturday for a four-round total of 279, nine-under par.

It marked the sixth time he had won the event.

He finished six strokes ahead of runnerup Yoshitaka Yamamoto, another Japanese pro, who finished with rounds of 67 and 71.

Perry Finds Layoff Helps

Baseball

"It was a long four years in the first half of the season," said the Texas Rangers after besting the Yankees and Catfish Hunter, 1-0, with a four-hitter Friday night. "The All-Star break was the best thing that could have happened for me. After I pitched Friday in Boston, Billy Martin told me to just go ahead and go home and get my family moved to Texas, then relax and forget about baseball . . . I definitely think it helped. I felt like I had better stuff tonight than any other time this season."

"Go in and play left field," said New York Met manager Yogi Berra. "Go ahead and put someone else in," replied Met outfielder Cleon Jones Friday night.

Jones pinch hit in the seventh inning against Atlanta and lined out. Outwardly showing his anger, Jones threw his helmet alongside the Mets' dugout. A shouting match then ensued with Berra. Berra said afterwards: "I told Jones to play left field and he wouldn't go out there. He didn't say why. It was embarrassing. It forced me to use another player. I couldn't wait all day for him to go out there."

Donald Grant, chairman of the Mets' board, said that the Mets lately had trouble with Jones. "He's been coming in late to workouts and missing clubhouse meetings."

A group of investors, including former San Francisco Giants manager Herman Franks and outfielder Willie Mays, will make a $12 million offer to buy the troubled National League baseball club, a Salt Lake City newspaper reported Saturday. The group would keep the team in San Francisco, the story said.

Franks and SLC businessman Ernest Psarras, another partner in the syndicate, reportedly will present the deal in San Francisco Tuesday.

Auto Racing

Graham Hill, two-time world auto racing champion, announced his retirement Friday. The 46-year-old Englishman had not raced since April 1974 and said he would concentrate on managing his own Formula One team.

Track

John Wayne Rathke, a Howard Payne football coach, also has been named head track coach, succeeding Don Hood, whose contract was not renewed for economic reasons.

Horse Racing

Six persons were charged Saturday with disturbing the peace following a riot at Richelieu Park in Montreal Friday. Damage caused was $50,000 and forced cancellation of Saturday's races.

It all erupted when 5,500 fans, angered by what they considered an unfair eighth-race quinella payoff, smashed windows and television monitors in the clubhouse and burned benches in the stands.

Some spectators shouted "Gang of thieves" after the quinella paid only $58.50 after a 25-1 shot, Lord Mitch, combined with Jocelyn Bunter. It was the same amount as a win bet on Lord Mitch.

Football

"The beards were a lot of fun, but in this heat, no way," quarterback Terry Bradshaw said after players at the Pittsburgh Steelers' Summer camp in Latrobe, Pa. Gone were all those Super Bowl beards and for Terry, so was 20 pounds. "I'm down to 206 right now. That's the lowest I've been since I was a freshman in college."

Bradshaw was typical of the trim-reporting Steelers. Flat middles were the rule, except for defensive tackle Charlie Davis, who reported at a whopping 298 pounds on a 6-2 frame. One Steeler observed, "Charlie ate his Super Bowl check."

Baltimore's NFL Colts acquired linebackers Jim Cheynuski from Buffalo and Al Cowlings from Houston for undisclosed draft choices . . . Although Duane Thomas, the controversial running back with the Washington Redskins, can't agree on contract terms, he doesn't want to leave the club either. "I've been working with the Redskins the last two years; it would not be logical to go off with some other club. It is time for us to make it to the Super Bowl and win the Super Bowl."

Ryan Gets Cortisone Shot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fireballing Nolan Ryan has taken the first cortisone shot of his career for a rotator cuff injury, the same injury which ended the career of former Dodger great Don Drysdale.

A report Friday said Ryan sustained the injury June 1 when he pitched the fourth no-hitter of his career, tying a major league record.

Since that time Ryan has won one game and lost seven, including Friday's 2-0 defeat at Milwaukee. His record, which was 9-3, has fallen to 10-10.

The rotator cuff is a ligament that helps holds the arm in place in the shoulder joint. Previously it had been reported only that Ryan suffered a groin injury which caused him to miss a start in late June during his losing string.

Ryan said he took the cortisone shot a week ago Thursday and that the arm has responded well.

"My arm felt dead warming up on the sidelines a week ago Thursday," Ryan said.

Oh Still Eyes Aaron's Mark

Oh, who at 35 has enough good years left for a chance to break the world record for career home runs, is working to break out a small slump which has seen his batting average dip to .300 and his home run pace slip to about one every four games.

He also wants to help his Yomuri Giants, the power of Japanese baseball for a decade, climb out of last place, 11 games behind the Central League leader midway through the 130-game season.

"My utmost concern has been, and is, to help our team do better," Oh said. "How can you aim at individual titles when your team needs your contribition?

"I have to admit I'm in an uncomfortable slump like the one I had four years ago, and I'm trying my best to do well."

His mid-July batting average of .300 with 16 home runs and 43 runs batted in puts him behind in his quest to match his 1974 performance of .332, 49 homers and 107 RBI. In 1973, he batted .355, hit 55 homers and knocked in 114 runs.

"Some people say I'm still good enough. It may be true, but I'm not satisfied because I know I was better and I can do better with my ability and physical power," Oh said.

It isn't unusual for his batting practice turns to last more than 100 pitches. He once destroyed the straw-mat floor of a Japanese inn while working on his swing on a road trip.

"You have to practice your swing all the time or else you won't be able to swing your bat much faster than the speed of a pitch," he said.

And to break out of a slump, Oh said, "The only thing you can do is practice as hard as a rookie."

Part of Oh's problem is a muscle strain he suffered in his left leg in spring training. He tries to avoid painful movements.

Seattle Next For A's?

Something's Gotta Give In Bay Area Baseball

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Will the Oakland A's, who were the Kansas City A's, who were the Philadelphia A's, soon become the A's of Seattle or some other city?

Or will it be San Francisco that loses its major league baseball franchise?

Baseball Commissioneer Bowie Kuhn and others are convinced that one of the Bay Area teams must go, at least by the start of the next baseball season. And what should be done was going to be a major topic among the major league owners when they met this past week following the All-Star Game in Milwaukee.

Finley Bristles

But the political haggling—much of it over the rehiring of Kuhn—kept the Bay Area's problems from being discussed.

Even before the owners convened, Charles O. Finley, owner of the American League A's and the leader of the dump-Kuhn movement, said:

"There ain't no way any decision is going to be made at this meeting . . . I don't care what Bowie Kuhn said . . . ain't nobody going to tell Charlie Finley what to do."

The Giants' 72-year-old president, Horace Stoneham, who reportedly owns 70 per cent of the National League club, may not be as involved as Finley in the final decision unless it comes soon.

Giants For Sale

Stoneham put his club up for sale in May for between $17 and $18 million, voicing a forlorn hope "to field a winning team and to boost our attendance enough to make money this year."

Well, the Giants are playing under .500 ball and battling San Diego for third place in the National League West, far behind first-place Cincinnati. Attendance for 38 home dates up to the All-Star break was 285,753, compared to 324,370 for 38 dates last year, an average of 8,536.

And last season's home draw for the Giants was the lowest in the majors, 519,991, down 204,610 from 1973. And this year the Giants are again 24th in attendance.

Even the city's No. 1 booster, San Francisco Mayor Joseph Alioto, has admitted in a letter to Kuhn: "Most knowledgeable observers agreed that the Bay Area cannot successfully support more than one team.

The fall-off in San Francisco attendance is a fact. The reasons for it are many and speculative, among them:

—Inflation. While ticket prices have risen only slightly, the cost of refreshments, parking and gasoline keep going up.

—Losing teams and lack of big-name stars. The Giants haven't won a pennant since 1962 and have traded such stars as Willie Mays, Juan Marichal, Willie McCovey, Gaylord Perry and Bobby Bonds.

—Candlestick Park. The temperature there can drop into the 40s; winds affect play and there have been increased complaints of rowdyism.

—Competition of other sports including new pro teams in tennis and soccer.

But A's attendance this season is up 40 per cent—614,024 for 45 dates, compared to 441,862 for the same number last year. Yet Finley points out "almost one-third of our crowds come on Monday nights at half price" and there's the cost of fireworks and such special-night gifts as bats, tote bags and seat cushions.

Finley never has claimed to have lost money on the A's, whose home gate has exceeded a million only once—by a scant 761 fans in 1973. But he sees things differently than when he moved the club here in 1968, when he said: "Now Bay Area fans will be able to see major league baseball at home every day of the season."

"I do not think two teams can survive in the Bay Area, period," he now says.

Montreuil Keeps Edge In Batting

Midland Cub infielder Al Montreuil fattened his Texas League batting lead five points last week according.

Montreuil's averaged boomed to .342 to stay ahead of Arkansas outfielder Mike Potter, who is hitting .337 and is the first Texas Leaguer to reach the 100 hit mark this season.

El Paso's Paul Dade is third with .330 and still leads in slugging with a .624 percentage. Midland's Jose Ortiz is in the thick of the batting title chase with a .326 mark.

Along with Montreuil, Midland's Wayne Tyrone and Donnie Moore led the league in their specialties. For Tyrone, it was runs-batted-in. The former Pan American and Ranger JC star has 60. Donnie Moore, from Lubbock Monterey and Ranger JC, leads in strikeouts with 80.

The top pitching winners are Shreveport's Tim Jones, 9-3, Lafayette's Frank Ricelli, 9-5, and Julio Divison, 9-3. Shreveport's Randy Hopkins bounced ahead of Midland's Bruce Sutter in saves, 10-9, although Bruce since has picked up his 10th.

Midland leaped to second place in team batting with a .275 average, four points behind El Paso and three in front of Shreveport.

Kravitz Likes WFL Challenge

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — As general manager of the Jacksonville Express, Dick Kravitz knows he is following a bad act, but that's his bag.

"What I like best is a challenge," says Kravitz, who is battling to convince skeptics of the World Football League that they will get their money's worth if they buy a season ticket.

Kravitz, 34, who last performed his ticket-selling miracles in minor league baseball, is sure he can do the job.

"Our goal is to sell 20,000 season tickets," he said. "If we fall short, it won't shock me. After last year, if we sell 10,000, I'll be happy. People who are skeptical will come game to game."

Last year's WFL entry here, the Sharks, lost 10 of their 14 games and went out of business with six games unplayed, three at home. Season ticket holders were left in the lurch.

Although the Express is operated by a new corporation under no legal obligation for last year's debts, it has offered 1974's 14,000 season ticket holders three free games if they buy the package this year.

There haven't been many takers. Season ticket sales are below 5,000, although business picked up after the Express beat the Chicago Winds 34-23 in their first exhibition game at Chicago.

"I know the operation this year is all right, but I can't tell them it's all right," Kravitz says. "We have to make up for the problems the Sharks caused."

He has time on his side. The first regular season home game is Aug. 16 against defending champion Birmingham.

"Following a bad act and helping make it something else, that's the beauty," Kravitz said. "We did it with baseball, and there's a lot of satisfaction in it."

Kravitz was general manager of the Jacksonville Suns in the Class AA Southern League in 1973-74. A team which had drawn about 200 fans a game in previous years averaged 1,500 in 1973 and a little less last year, both times best in the league, without winning the pennant either year.

In 1973 he was named general manager of the year in all minor league baseball.

Kravitz, a native of Philadelphia and graduate of Temple and Ohio universities, is called a successful promoter, but he doesn't like the term.

"I like to talk in business terms," he said. "Promotion is a dirty word to some people. They see a guy with a cigar in his mouth and a deal up his sleeve. Nobody promotes a toothpaste. They market it. That's what we are trying to do with football."

He isn't worried about acceptance of professional football in Jacksonville. The annual Georgia-Florida college game and the Gator Bowl game are sellouts in the 70,000-seat stadium every time. The Sharks were second in the WFL in attendance when they folded.

"If our team is competitive, people will support it," he said. "You'll never see our signs beg people to support the Jacksonville Express. We'll just put the team on the field and give them something to support."

Oak Creek Crappie Are Active

Crappie fishing at Oak Creek Lake is at its best in several years. If you don't believe it, says Ike Pate of Sportsman's Lodge, just ask E. C. Pollard and family of Odessa. They ate all they could and still had over 100 to take home.

Or ask Cliff Barnett of Abilene, who caught more than 100 crappie.

There was some trolline baiting and channel cat caught, but nothing like the crappie action.

J. D. Decker of Midland caught the largest channel cat at 9½ pounds. Bass fisherman have found the big fish hard to come by, although some two and three pounders have been caught.

HUNTING AND FISHING

If you are going trout fishing in New Mexico, take a tip from the NM Fish Dept.

In the hot days of July and August, trout, usually active in the warmer part of the day in the spring, seek the shade and deep pools when the sun is highest. So the best time for action is evening or early morning.

Natural baits, such as nymphs, worms and artificials, will take trout during the hot months.

Cubs Bounce Mets Twice

BY TED BATTLES

Lefthander Steve Hamrick, the rookie from Cornell University, pitched a two-hitter and received 14-hit backing from his teammates as the Midland Cubs beat Jackson's Mets 12-0 to sweep a Texas League doubleheader Friday night.

Some 1,015 Cubs Stadium fans watched the Cubs sweat for their 3-2 win in the eight-inning opener, after the Mets had forced an overtime with a run in the top of the seventh.

Hamrick, now 2-1 since joining the Cubs from Key West, gave up a first inning double to Randy Trapp and a seventh inning two-bagger. It was the first shut-out by a Cub pitcher in over a month.

After the Cubs scored three in the first and one in the second, most of the game's suspense revolved around Hamrick's whitewash bid.

Jose Ortiz and Joe Wallis led the attack on three Jackson pitchers, chalking out five hits between them and knocking in three runs apiece.

Ortiz provided the crowd with a thrill in the seven-run seventh when he knocked an inside the park homer. Rick Miller came in fast on Pepi's sinking liner in an attempt to make a shoestring catch. But the ball skipped by and rolled to the fence in center.

It climaxed a 3-for-7 night for Ortiz in which he also stole two bases to close in on the league lead.

Wallis' heroics included two doubles and a single.

Walks to Ortiz and Mike Umfleet by starter Dennis Solari opened the nightcap. Then with one out, Wayne Tyrone lined to third baseman Dick Harris. The hard shot bounced out of his glove as he reached over his head and rolled behind him and toward the line. By the time he found it, Tyrone was safe. Harris' desperation throw to first was wild and two runs scored. Wayne then scored on a fly by Bill Bright.

Mike Sember walked, stole second, took third on an error and scored on Ortiz' hit in the second for a 4-0 lead and all was quiet until the seven-run seventh.

The Cubs lashed out eight hits in raking three pitchers over the coals and Wallis' two-run double and Ortiz two-run "leg" homer were the big blows.

The first game went eight innings when Jackson tied it 2-2 on a single by Larry Calufetti and a two-out double centerfielder Wallis couldn't catch up to in the seventh.

Joe Wallis
... big night at plate

Bill Huisman had homered in the fourth, his first, to give Midland a 2-1 lead and it looked safe the way Mike Weiss was pitching.

Weiss had a two-hitter going into the seventh. Calufetti's single came with one out. After Craig Clark skied to right, Dick Harris, who had grounded into two double plays earlier, hit his double.

If anything lefthander Bob Myrick had been even tougher on the Cubs. The Hattiesburg, Miss., pitched yielded a run in the third on a walk to Joe Wallis and a hit-and-run single by Jose Ortiz that scored the fleet Southern Illinois U. product all the way from first. Then, there was Huisman's poke over the left field fence.

So going into the eighth, Myrick had a three-hitter going. Bill Droege caught the defense back with a perfect bunt down the third base line and moved to second on Tyrone's well-executed sacrifice. Al Montreuil's "Excuse me" swing resulted in a weak grounder to first, but it moved Droege to third.

Huisman grounded to third and when Dick Harris' throw to first was up the line, Huisman slid under Craig Casek's tag as the run scored.

ADS AND DISCLOSURE RULE

The truth-in-lending law became effective July 1, 1969. It's also known as the disclosure rule. It requires lenders to give customers a plain statement of the credit charges involved in any transaction.

One area where is has helped to clear possible misunderstandings is in real estate ads. Remember when ads used to read like this: "FOR SALE" — 3-bedroom home in fine location, only $22,000 with $3,000 down."

Now, if the advertiser mentions the down payment, he must also mention the monthly payment and the interest rate. Tell all or tell nothing! You may advertise the selling price, or terms like "low down payment" or "easy terms." But when it comes to the big three — down payment, interest rate or monthly payment — if you mention one you have to tell all three.

The obvious reason is so buyers can't be misled by an ad that offers $2,000 down payment — and then finding out that the monthly payments are extremly high.

Captains' Jones 4-Hits Lafayette

By The Associated Press

In other games, Midland took a double header from Jackson 12-0 and 3-2, Alexandria smashed San Antonio 15-6, and El Paso beat Arkansas 7-2.

The Captains exploded for six runs in the eighth inning, including a three-run homer by Harry Safewright and a two-run double by Mitchell Page. Shreveport's Ron Mitchell hit a triple, a double, two singles and knocked in two runs. The Captains scored in the third when Tommy Thomas hit is 13th home run.

In a rain-plagued game at Alexandria, San Antonio pitchers gave up 18 hits, with Dennis Kinney tagged for the loss. The game was delayed 44 minutes by rain. The Aces also took advantage of six San Antonio errors. Tucker Ashford got four hits in four times at bat for the Aces. Dennis Yard was credited with the victory.

El Paso catcher Tom Donahue led his team to a victory over Arkansas with a double and two singles. El Paso got four runs off the Travelers' Randy Benson in the first inning. Pitcher Bill Rothan, who was credited with the victory, gave up eight hits to Arkansas.

Brock Picks Up Theft Pace After 36th Birthday

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Lou Brock celebrated his 36th birthday last month by stealing a base. He hasn't stopped running since.

The St. Louis Cardinals left fielder, off to a slow start in April, has picked up the pace of late and is contending for his ninth National League theft title.

"What is important," he said, "is consistency. That's what the game of baseball is all about, being able to do things well over a period of years and over the period of a whole season."

Consistency, with the notable exception of 1974, has been the hallmark of Brock's 10 seasons with the Cardinals.

Last year, a season since has labeled "once in a lifetime," the All-Star outfielder stole a major league record of 118 bases, a feat which nearly earned him NL Most Valuable Player honors.

Prior to that, his season highs had been the 74 bases he swiped in 1966 and the 70 he totaled in 1973.

"I'm about par to years in the past, excluding last year," Brock said after stealing No. 36 in St. Louis' 83rd game.

"The ratio is still about the same as it's always been," he added. "I think if you'll check the record you'll see that I've always stolen more bases after the All-Star Game than before."

13 Cent Stamp??

Most readers undoubtedly are aware of the fact that another increase in postal rates is in the making.

But some perhaps may not know that the boost in the price of first class postage stamps to 13 cents has been proposed to take effect this fall.

Yes, this is correct — 13 cents! Can you imagine settling on that unlucky (in the minds of many, many persons) figure?

It could be that this may be a means of reducing the flow of first class mail . . . since there are those men, women and children who simply will cease using the service rather than having to handle or be associated in any way with the numeral "13." You undoubtedly know persons (you may be one of them) who will not stay on the 13th floor of a hotel or rent an office on the 13th floor of a building. Many buildings skip the 13th floor completely.

The same thing holds true concerning other 13s . . . and, of course, there are those terrifying Fridays the 13th. Just imagine the hue and cry which would go up across the width and breadth of the land if and when the 13-cent stamp is announced officially. Twelve or even 14 cents perhaps, but never 13

The increase, of course, is proposed to meet postal service deficits.

Rep. Edward J. Derwinski of Illinois, ranking Republican on the House Post Office Committee, said he and Chairman David N. Henderson, D-N.C., favor a rate increase rather than a $2.5 billion subsidy to meet the deficit.

Derwinski said the rate could be 12 cents for first class letters if the new rate went into effect soon enough. Postmaster Gen. Benjamin F. Bailar previously had said he needs a first class rate up to 13 cents rather than the present 10 cents. We agree such an increase would be "first class" all right. If the postmaster general will guarantee improved service, most persons likely would go for an even higher rate hike.

The new rate could go into effect as early as Oct. 1 or Nov. 1, under the House proposal.

The Derwinski-Henderson proposal would permit the Postal Service, on a one-time only temporary basis, to raise rates to cover its deficit without going through normal procedures. The deficit is expected to be $1.7 billion to $1.8 billion, partly because of the new postal pay contract now being negotiated. The House postal service subcommittee already has approved a $2.5 billion subsidy bill.

Derwinski is of the opinion that the deficit should be paid by customers in the form of higher postage rates rather than by all U.S. taxpayers with the subsidy. He may have something there.

At this point something else comes to light which likely will be surprising to some persons.

Did you know, for instance, that the Postal Rate Commission as yet has not approved 10 cents as a permanent rate? Well, that's correct. We can understand the commission's reluctance to approve it . . . but 22 months is a long time to deliberate. It really would be interesting to see what would happen if the commission rejected the yet temporary 10-cent rate.

Anyway, this is the reason for the proposed legislative action. Without it, the Postal Rate Commission would not be able to boost rates until the previous increase had been approved.

If you have some spare time this afteronon, you might want to try and figure out this and other strange financial maneuvering in the various branches of the federal government . . . that is, if you can get around that "13" business.

INSIDE REPORT—

Policy Reversal Is Under Investigation

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — A sudden policy reversal just before the 1968 presidential election that lined up Spiro T. Agnew behind the Greek military dictatorship is now under close scrutiny by the Senate committee investigating the Central Intelligence Agency.

What has given the committee's staff sudden new interest in the seven-year-old events is the unearthing of a private, unpublished letter from the Maryland state campaign manager of the 1968 Nixon-Agnew campaign which specifically documents Agnew's spectacular switch from careful neutrality to overt support for the junta.

The Sept. 27 handwritten letter signed by Louise Gore, then a Maryland state senator and political ally of then Gov. Agnew, expressed "shock" at Agnew's sudden embrace of the junta in a speech earlier that day to the National Press Club in Washington. As such, the letter may prove indispensible to the committee's probe of long-standing charges that the junta funnelled Greek government funds into the Nixon-Agnew campaign in return for Nixon-Agnew support.

The next phase of the CIA probe, headed by Sen. Frank Church of Idaho, is "covert action" abroad — allegations of CIA political intervention to influence domestic politics in sensitive situations abroad. The allegations in the case of the Greek junta, however, are deeper: whether any funds transmitted from the junta to the Nixon-Agnew campaign included money from the CIA's covert-action account in Athens.

Miss Gore's letter, written on the letterhead of her family-owned Fairfax Hotel in Washington to Elias Demetracopoulos, then an exiled Greek foe of the junta, was explicit and specific. She had been assured by Agnew the day before his Press Club speech that there would be no change in his position of strict neutrality toward the junta. As governor, Agnew had maintained that position since the April 1967 military coup, even though a large majority of Greek-Americans supported the junta.

But all that changed Sept. 27. Agnew strongly implied that the junta was "seriously living up to their obligations" and had "promised free elections" following a constitutional referendum to be held Sept. 29 — just two days after Agnew delivered his blessing. (The free elections, as was quite predictable, were never held.)

A sudden endorsement by Agnew, the highest U.S. public official of Greek ancestry and Nixon's running-mate, gave the junta new respectability with profound implications inside Greece. Agnew's words were headlined in the junta-controlled press and the referendum was carried overwhelmingly.

The key sentence in Miss Gore's letter to Demetracopoulos was one of extreme indignation. "It was bad enough," she wrote, "that he told us he was going to have to be neutral. But then to turn around and support the regime, I can't believe it. What made him change his mind — or rather, who?"

That is precisely the question being asked today not only by members of Church's CIA-investigating committee but by two other congressional panels: the Middle East subcommittees of the Senate Foreign Relations and the House International Relations Committees. Copies of Miss Gore's letter to Demetracopoulos are under study by staff investigators of both panels, with her complete approval.

For seven years, Miss Gore refused to give her letter to Congress. But now, following her campaign as Republican nominee for governor of Maryland last year, she is fully ready to cooperate. How much she can help, however, is another matter. When we asked Miss Gore to explain Agnew's sudden switch, she replied she is as much in the dark today as when she wrote the letter.

Crucial to the unfolding investigation is millionaire Thomas A. Pappas of Boston, who holds U.S.-Greek dual citizenships and was one of the Nixon-Agnew campaign's chief money-raisers. As the junta's unofficial emissary to the Nixon administration, he usually was along on the endless parade of visiting American officials to the junta during the Nixon administration.

The beneficiary of lucrative commercial deals with the junta, Pappas on June 18, 1968, gave an interview to the pro-junta Athens newspaper, Apogevmatini, in which he bragged about his alleged connection with the CIA. "I have worked for the CIA anytime my help was requested," Pappas was quoted as saying in the interview.

Accordingly, Pappas is certain to be summoned for testimony when the Church committee ends the assassination phase of its probe and moves into the explosive area of covert CIA operations abroad.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By JACK ANDERSON With Les Whitten

WASHINGTON — If ever a Pentagon project cried for an official investigation, it is the Army's swimming trucks that sink. Now, it turns out, even on dry land they lurch about so violently that drivers feel like throwing up.

In military jargon, the trucks are known as "GOER vehicles." Each includes a diesel engine tractor which pulls an eight-ton cargo body, a 10-ton wrecker or a 2,500-gallon tanker.

There are 836 of these clunkers presently in the Army inventory, and the brass hats are planning to purchase another 464. Cost to the taxpayer: a staggering $90 million.

The GOER was developed by and purchased from the Caterpillar Tractor Co. It was designed to be a rugged, battlefield-worthy truck with a "floating and swimming capability for crossing calm water barriers."

But military test drivers maneuvered the trucks into Maryland's Chesapeake Bay and found themselves in water above their ankles. On one occasion, according to internal test reports, a GOER pulling a tanker unit "swamped and sank."

One report cautioned that "the vehicle (should) be prohibited from swimming until deficiencies . . . are corrected." If they are to be taken into the water, it counseled, only "well-trained and experienced driver personnel" should be used.

The same batch of tests turned up dozens of other shortcomings, including problems in the brakes, steering system, alternator, transmission, front axle and tractor frame. The personnel heater didn't work, and "the high noise level in the cab" was a "health hazard to both the driver and co-driver."

Last December, a unit at Ft. Hood, Texas, conducted additional tests on the GOER. Compared with three other "high mobility" vehicles, it came out looking like a Tinker Toy.

A draft test report, stamped "DISTRIBUTION LIMITED," cites these results:

—In one tactical exercise "along a dirt tank trail . . . averaging 25 miles per hour . . . all vehicles kept up . . . except the GOERs which fell 25 minutes behind within 7½ miles. When the GOERs caught up with the waiting column, their crews were suffering from motion sickness and requested to continue on the paved road."

—"The harsh ride qualities . . . were severe enough in many cases to cause loss of complete control of the vehicles. The drivers would bounce vertically and be thrown from side-to-side with such force, velocity, and frequency that their feet could not be kept on the throttle and/or brake."

—"When the vehicles are in all-wheel drive and the steering is yawed toward the limit, either left or right, the rear body tends to crawl over the front power unit . . . At least twice the driver involved felt in danger of tipping over."

In sum, the cantankerous contraptions "ranked at or near the bottom in virtually every area tested."

Indeed, the report recommended they be "returned to depot stock and held in strategic reserve" for use only "in extremely muddy environments."

Footnote: Army spokesmen insist their GOERs have met all the criteria for which they were designed and have "served well in use in the Army." The Ft. Hood tests, they said, were confined to "certain characteristics" and did not take into consideration other qualities of the GOER, such as its ability to swim.

PHILIPPINE FUNERAL: Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos refused to guarantee safe passage to the daughter and son-in-law of a dead former friend so they could accompany the remains of her father from the United States to the Philippines.

Eugenia Lopez Sr., once Manila's most powerful press lord and a Marcos supporter, went into exile here when Marcos became a dictator in 1972. He died of cancer begging Marcos to let his three sons in the Philippines visit him one last time.

Not only did Marcos deny the request, he refused to promise a safe return to the United States to Lopez's daughter, Presy, and her husband, Steve Psinakis. Thus, only Lopez's widow and a fourth, younger son went back to bury Lopez.

PICNIC COVERUP: For more than four months, U.S. marshals covered up the presence of an intruder at a picnic for sequestered jurors who were trying ex-White House aide John Ehrlichman and others for the break-in at Dan Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

The interloper was a marshal's wife who showed up at a July 4, 1974, outing for the jurors, an "improper contact" that is supposed to be reported immediately to the judge.

Washington field office marshals covered it up until Marshal Service Director Wayne Colburn learned of it in late October. He quickly notified judges, who met with prosecutors and defense lawyers. Although no retrial was ordered, a Colburn spokesman said that the issue of disciplinary action "is not dead."

LSD: The Bygone Time Of Experimentation

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — The incredible tragic story of how an Army researcher, Frank Olson, committed suicide, apparently after being given a dose of LSD in an experiment by the CIA, made me remember of a luncheon back in April, 1966, with Dr. Timothy Leary, then fast becoming the guru of hallucinogenic drugs.

Leary invited a small group to the Harvard Club in New York City to regale the skeptical with tales of LSD's wonders and revelations about who had used it. What he said in that five-hour session helped put this sad story involving the CIA into perspective.

Among the names Leary dropped was that of the late President Kennedy whom he said had tried LSD, and this created interest in "members of his family who were now planning to take it."

Pressed on the eyebrow-raiser on Kennedy, Leary (and this is before the inside of his head turned into a dark, foggy place) said his knowledge on Kennedy was based only "on reports I have heard."

But he also mentioned that Henry and Clare Luce had taken LSD, along with many other creative and religious-minded people, and had enriched their lives because of their experience.

Well, I phoned Clare Luce, widow of the famed founder of Time, Inc., and its array of publishing enterprises, and she confirmed some of what Leary had said, lo, these many years ago. "Yes, Harry had it twice, and I had it three times, under the supervision of an excellent psychiatrist, Dr. Sidney Cohen (of Los Angeles)," Mrs. Luce said. "He had gathered a group of the culturally elite, who had agreed to participate, to explore how the creative mind works.

"There was Aldous Huxley, Christopher Isherwood (playwright), Allan Watts (then a Presbyterian minister), and Gerald Heard (a religious philosopher).

"We were given minute quantities, and our verbal reaction was tape recorded. Harry and I had very pleasant experiences with it. We understood that good and bad trips depended on predisposition of the subject and how the session was conducted. Under Dr. Cohen, it was all done very well."

There were a number of controlled experiments with LSD in those days, including one in Boston under the supervision of Dr. Walter Pankes, wherein selected clergymen and seminary students took LSD to achieve transcendental experiences, indeed, to have communion with God.

And naturally, because LSD had tremendous mind-altering capabilities, the CIA developed a strong interest. Also, there were reports that the Soviets, then locked in cold war with us, had used an LSD-type drug on people they detained.

"If LSD was given to a person under your control," Dr. Cohen said, "you could get confessions and information you wanted.

"The CIA was also interested in the fact that LSD could be delivered to a large population through food and water and could thus disable it. In those days, informed consent wasn't a big deal in the medical field the way it is today, and I'm not surprised as to what happened in that (Olson) case. The bad thing was that he wasn't told that he was given LSD.

"It was for this reason that many youngsters went berserk—they weren't told, and maybe they were given far too large a dose, or that the stuff was adulterated.

"I know of no use of LSD today in medical practice. It has a bad name. Years ago, though, it was considered a producer of a psychotic state, and could be used to figure out the biochemistry of the brain. It could produce a psychotic state in the laboratory, and therefore was useful."

The American life, which moves so fast and which is so propelled by the media, particularly television, our memories grow shorter and perspective becomes more precious.

If what the CIA is charged with proves to be true, that it administered LSD in 1953 to that Army researcher, without his knowledge, to find out what his reactions would be, well, that is a gross violation, and the agency stands responsible for his death.

But it is also important to understand the context of that deed, which occurred at the time when there was much controlled experimentation with LSD; this work was considered respectable, and the Soviets and the United States were deadly serious about subverting each other's activities—with LSD, if necessary.

Sadness Felt

To The Editor:

On the occasion of the 17th Observance of Captive Nations Week of July 13-19, it can only be with sadness and a deep sense of tragedy that we realistically view South Vietnam and Cambodia as the most recent additions to the already long list of captive nations.

Some analyists are already indulging in all sorts of spurious semantic distinctions and rationalizations about a united Vietnam, coalition, intra-Communist rivalry and so forth, but the glaring fact is that two free and determined national entities have fallen under the cover of Communist domination. To believe otherwise is the height of naivete.

No Big Deal

To The Editor:

Odessa is sin city and Midland is clean and pure. Ho, ho, ho! I'm surprised you didn't come right out and say that no Midlander has ever patronized a topless bar or porn flick in Odessa.

Do you remember the days, not so long ago, when a Midlander wanting to buy a bottle of liquor had to drive to the Ector County line?

I had thought your twin articles in last Sunday's paper were a new low in journalism, but upon reconsideration, I realize they are nothing more than just plain, old-fashioned hypocrisy.

I agree that XXX movies have utterly no redeeming social value, and I don't care to patronize the theaters that show them, but I also know that no one is going to pull me into such a theater and force me to watch.

I also know that there is not a Communist conspiracy to exhibit these to my children to undermine their values and corrupt them. And surely, the opening of such a establishment in a town does not corrupt its citizens.

Visitors Disgusted

To The Editor:

I am the chief accountant of a banking chain in Latin America. We invest our money in different enterprises in the United States.

We recently visited your city and other cities in Texas investigating businesses there. We also visited San Antonio and while there watched different programs on television. We saw on Channel 12 a notorious and infamous atheist, Mrs. Magdalene Murray O'Hair who lives (of all places) in Austin, the capitol of Texas.

The bankers were very disgusted at seeing the outward presentation of atheism in the United States. We have always been taught that America was founded on Christian ideals. This is very different from that of Russia, Red China and other Communist countries which profess atheism as their state religion.

We Latin Americans respect the U.S.A. for it's fight for Christian democratic principles and not for outward displays of atheism on TV, radio and newspapers.

We Latin Americans can and will invest our money in countries of the world where Christian ideals are respected and represented.

Let Us Decide

To The Editor:

Abilenians given a voting choice rejected the "economical trash dumpsters." Midlanders had no choice!

Following a free trial of dumpsters our city council approved purchase of an additional 500 units. At the following council meeting a neighborhood spokesman called attention to hazards of these containers not meeting city regulations covering garbage cans. Also, he advised that these were in effect, little more than "man made" cafeterias for flies.

The presiding council official gave assurance they were aware of these hazards and had enlisted aid of oil companies to solve the problem. Another member of the audience questioned whether resulting indiscriminate use of pesticides by citizens might immunize the flies and defeat the research, His concern is substantiated by recent statement of a city official quoted in The Reporter-Telegram July 13, "the flies are immune . . ."

In this article is a request by city council for a "unified citizens effort." Also there by another official calling on "each citizen to carry a can of fly spray . . . and give the container a blast." Is this not an open invitation for citizens to repeat the earlier mistake?

Admittedly ineffective city foggers dispense an odorant reminiscent of the Houston ship channel smog. Citizens here, particularly at the chosen "times when the winds won't waft it away," and particularly victims of respiratory ailments, must suffer along with the "divebombers." Disregarding the questionable economic advantages aggravated by unforseen side expenses, our greater concern should be the health hazards.

Might it not be more profitable in the long run to let citizens here have a voice in deciding whether we continue to tolerate the dumpsters — the basic cause of our present problem?

It Was Forecast

Dear Sir:

Last year, when Congress spent months threatening to abolish the depletion allowance on petroleum, before it finally did just that, Congressmen were told, collectively and individually, by various petroleum organizations and independent producers that to do so would be a grave mistake. Predictions were freely made that it would not only slow oil development, but would also increase the price of gasoline.

Now we read that Congress will appoint a "special committee to determine why the price of gasoline has been increased"!

Can memory be that short? All tax increases anywhere are ultimately passed on to the consumers.

Soviets May Need More Grain

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union may be worse off in its harvest prospects than officially disclosed and could need even larger amounts of foreign grain to make up deficits, according to sources in the Agriculture Department.

A senior official admitted Friday night that Soviet harvest prospects have continued to deteriorate from USDA's estimate two weeks ago that the crop would produce 195 million metric tons. He added that no new assessment has been made.

Lowest Since 1972?

But sources, who asked not to be identified, said the Soviet harvest potential has dropped to 190 million tons and possibly to 185 million, the lowest since the disastrously short grain crop of 168.2 million tons in 1972 that sent Moscow scurrying into world markets for grain.

The 1972 purchases, including 19 million tons of U.S. grain, helped trigger rising food prices for American consumers as prices for wheat, corn and other grain went up.

Richard E. Bell, deputy assistant secretary for international affairs and commodity programs, said he could not confirm or deny reports from USDA sources that the Soviet crop has declined 5 million to 10 million tons since the estimate of 195 million tons was issued July 9.

'Crop Sliding'

But Bell said that most department experts "are inclined to think it will have to be lowered" because of worsening drought conditions in major grain areas of the Soviet Union.

"I think everybody's generally agreed that the crop is sliding below 195 (million tons,)" Bell told a reporter. "But they haven't decided that finally yet."

Two U.S. grain companies announced last week that Russia had bought a total of 3.2 million tons of wheat, and Canada said sales of 2 million tons had been made. Rumors still were flying that the Soviets also were in the market for corn and more wheat.

U.S. Team Visits

Bell said also that a team of U.S. grain experts was due in Moscow today to check on Soviet spring-planted grain, which makes up two-thirds of Russian production.

A year ago, another U.S. team returned abruptly after arriving in Moscow because Soviet officials would not let it visit some important grain areas. The trips are part of a joint U.S.-Soviet agreement calling for the exchange of agricultural information.

15 Million Tons Short

Based on the official USDA estimate of 195 million tons of grain production this year — down 10 per cent from Moscow's goal — officials think Russia will need to import a total of 15 million tons to make up the shortfall.

Department officials, including Bell, also say that the United States could easily sell Russia five million tons of corn and five million of wheat if 1975 crops turn out as large as they look now. Up to seven million tons each of wheat and corn could be provided without difficulty under those circumstances, officials say.

ART BUCHWALD—

Traveling With Henry Confusing

When you travel with Henry Kissinger on his plane, you move so fast that your notes tend to get jumbled up and it's hard to keep everything he does and says in order.

I planned to do the definitive piece on a Kissinger trip, but when I started to go through my notebook this is all I had.

"GENEVA—Kissinger meets with Gromyko in front of Soviet mission. They are both smiling for cameramen. Gromyko now likes to tell jokes when posing for pictures. Will this be Kissinger's greatest legacy to world diplomacy?

"Large groups of American tourists waiting in lobby of Hotel Intercontinental. They are not so much sold on detente, but half have been asked to get out of their rooms and the other half are still waiting to get into them . . . . Hope Henry doesn't find out they were not waiting for him . . . . Gromyko gave dinner for Kissinger. Menu: Red and black caviar, smoked fish, cold turkey (should be joke here), cold vegetables, vodka, asparagus soup, trout served with white wine, shaslik with red wine, ice-cream cake with strawberries, French fruit, champagne and coffee . . . . Kissinger gave lunch the next day. Prosciutto and melon, roast veal, red wine and strawberry ice cream and coffee. No wonder the Russians are worried about parity . . . . Hands down . . . .

"On board plane from Geneva to Bonn. Reporters go up to front of plane to be given background briefing by senior U.S. official. Who happens to be a household name.

"Discussion is about SALT. Senior U.S. official may not be quoted directly but what he says is fascinating. Soviets want to have nuclear tests for what they say is peaceful purposes above the 150 kiloton limit as outlined in nuclear test ban treaty. U.S. says if Soviets explode peace bombs we have right to verify that tests are not above the threshold . . . . Below threshold means explosion for civilian needs. Above threshold means explosion for military purpose. Russians insist they won't go over threshold, but we can't look.

"We have now problems with SALT. Under recent agreement each side can have 1,200 MIRVed missiles (more than one nuclear warhead on missile), but Soviets now have SS-17s and 19s to replace their SS-11s, which are still in place. Difficulty, says senior official, is when you look down a Soviet hole you don't know what's on the tip of the missile. We have now counted 308 new holes in Soviet Union. Russians complain we have 450 new holes in Washington, D.C. They will not take our word that we're honestly trying to build a subway.

"Senior U.S. official's eyes get glazed as he starts talking about the new sophisticated naval cruise missile and whether it should be considered a strategic weapon under SALT or not. Then he suddenly turns to me and says, 'Stop taking notes. This whole thing sounds like one of your columns' . . . .

"As part of visit to Germany Henry must visit Summerfest, a beer party held in Municipal Theater in Bonn for 2,000 people. The Germans all love Henry and even play a song they wrote about him. Kissinger enjoys himself and signs autographs and drinks beer and gets crushed. An admiring German politician next to me says in English if he had not gone to America he would have been chancellor of Germany. I look at him and say, 'You've got to be kidding' . . .

"Only place there is some question of Kissinger's popularity is among Israelis. At castle outside of Bonn for Rabin talk an embittered Israeli reporter asks me why, if Henry is so happily married with Nancy, does he always have to screw the Jews?"

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Moses Couldn't Get There Today

By STUART LONG
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — People who try to build things nowadays are having fun revising the story about Moses and the Red Sea.

"What I'm going to do," Moses told his staff, "is raise up my staff and roll the waters back so my people can cross the sea, and then let the waters roll back and stop the Egyptians. — What do you guys think of it?"

His public information officer promised him two pages in the Old Testament if he could pull it off. His supply officer thought it was great, because he was about out of supplies. His artillery commander was worried that his guns would get stuck in the mud, but he was willing to try it because his camels were getting tired. But his engineering officer stopped the whole thing.

"It's a great idea, Moses, but it won't get us out of this trouble," he explained. "It will take two years to get up an environmental impact statement, and then two more years to win the lawsuit the Sierra Club will bring."

"That's too bad," Moses said. "I guess we'll never make it to the Promised Land."

Some of the people trying to get water supply projects built under the Congressional act setting up the requirement for environmental impact statements before a project can start wonder whether they will ever get to the promised land. Livingston Lake on the lower Trinity got finished, but Wallisville Lake downstream from it has been blocked more than two years by an environmental impact suit. It was about three-fourths complete when it was stopped.

Cooper Lake on the Sulphur River in Delta County has been stopped more than three years, and the Corps of Engineers has now announced that it won't get the impact statement finished before next January. Then the court will have to review its adequacy. Meanwhile, the Texarkana and Dallas areas worry about their water futures.

Palmetto Bend Dam on the Lavaca in Jackson County has been awaiting for months the decision by a Federal Judge, after a long trial, on whether the impact statement was adequate.

Just this last week, a steering committee had its first meeting to begin a new water study on the Lower Colorado River below Austin.

Among the members of the steering committee put together by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation are representatives of the Audubon Society, the Sierra Club and the Sportsmen's Clubs of Texas.

"It's a whole new world," said Engineer Norman Flaigg as the study got under way. "But the environmentalists are giving us a lot of good input."

One of the leading "thinkers" on the subject, Dr. H. T. Odum of the University of Florida, has come up with a new idea for measuring economic impact. Dr. Odum is an impressive man, a fine speaker and a persuasive one. His new idea seeks to tie together the two major problems of modern life in America, energy and the environment.

Why not study these projects with "energetics," he asks. So he measures the value of things in terms of how much energy they require, and how much they will produce. Dr. Odum's plan is mind boggling, hard for an ordinary mind to grasp. But in brief, he translates everything into energy.

The power which will be produced, the manufactured products, the transportation, the food which will result from the project are measured in money value and energy production. The cost of supplying those products is measured in "kilocalories" or energy used by the project. If the "cost" is balanced by the "produce" in energy, it's a maybeso project. If it produces more energy than it uses, it's a good project.

It takes computers, both analog and digital, to figure out the results. But it is described simply to show that people are grappling with the problems created by the conflicts over energy and the environment, and are coming up with new ideas to solve the new problems.

Dr. Odum's idea is under debate among the people who worry with these abstruse questions. Satellite photographs in infra-red are used to analyze the land a state at a time. New techniques are turning to use everywhere, creating hope that mankind will indeed grope its way out of the miasma of fear and confusion and hostility which seems to engulf so many people nowadays.

And even if we can't understand what these bright young people are saying, we can hold hope that they will indeed find some way to escape across the Red Sea with the help of computers instead of camels and get back to the Promised Land we thought we had found a generation ago.

McCamey Schools Name Depository

McCAMEY—The Security State Bank of McCamey has been named as the school depository for the McCamey school district for the 1975-76 school year.

The appointment was made by the McCamey School Board, which also appointed the auditing firm of Eckert, Story, Ransom and Ingrum as auditors for the 1974-75 school year.

In other business at the board's regular meeting, Janet Witcher was appointed to a teaching position for the coming school year and payment of tuition for the cheerleaders to attend camp was authorized.

Irish Priests Ask Prayers For Rain

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Parish priests are urging Irishmen to pray for more rain to break a nine-week drought — the longest farmers on the island can remember.

Dublin had its driest June since 1942. And a spokesman for the weather service here said that the showers the last few days eased the crisis "for the moment" but said that August could bring more hot, dry weather.

Observations

Slow Down. According to a recent Roper survey, 12 percent of us are saving gasoline by driving smaller cars, and 12 percent now go to work in car pools, representing considerable progress from a year ago. What hurts is that fewer people are now observing the 55 m.p.h. speed limit, for that has saved lives—not just energy.

When people were watching their speedometers last year, traffic fatalities declined by 9,153—down 16.6 percent. Officials credit much of this improvement directly to slower driving.

There's really no good reason for driving faster, anyway. Sure, Junior will argue that bursts of high speed are needed to burn the carbon off the spark plugs. But that's pure hokum. If your engine is in good mechanical condition, plugs won't foul at 55 m.p.h. On the other hand, the higher temperatures at increased speeds erode the gap between spark plug electrodes, reducing their performance.

"IT'S A REAL CHALLENGE. YOU HAVE TO GET THE OIL OUT OF THE GROUND AND TO THE MARKET THROUGH THIS MAZE OF FEDERAL RESTRICTIONS, STATE RESTRICTIONS, AND LOCAL RESTRICTIONS."

The "too silent" majority. We're often told that most Americans oppose offshore drilling for oil and gas. But it simply isn't so, even in the coastal areas near potential drilling sites. Every poll we can lay our hands on says the people are pulling for it.

For instance: A nationwide Louis Harris poll. A poll of community leaders in eight East and Gulf Coast cities by Oxtoby-Smith, Inc. A statewide poll in California by the Field Research Corporation. And we've seen nearly a dozen more, all with the same basic message: Let's get our feet wet.

Most people seem to understand what state and national politicians do not, namely that offshore drilling has been overbuilt as an issue. The record of environmental protection is actually very good: only four serious spills out of the more than 19,000 wells that have been drilled, mostly in the Gulf of Mexico. But equally important, the public as a whole seems to accept that the oil and gas from offshore areas is badly needed by the economy. Let's face it, too much U.S. cash is flowing to foreign countries to buy petroleum we could be producing ourselves.

On this issue, the politicians clearly lag behind the balanced point of view of the majority of the people. Isn't it time they listened, so America can have more energy of its own?

Perhaps as an indication of what the dollar is worth, there is talk in the Treasury Department about reviving the $2 bill. It may never happen, but if it does, one problem will be to decide whose picture to put on it. The way money has been running through people's fingers, it ought to be Secretariat's.

Bottom of the Barrel. The way the new Washington rules read, no local community can now authorize construction of a major shopping center, hotel, stadium or factory without clearance with the federal Environmental Protection Agency. To which Professor Irving Kristol of New York University reacts: "If this conception of EPA's mission is permitted to stand, it will be the single most powerful branch of government; having far greater direct control over our individual lives than Congress, or the executive, or state and local governments." Here we were worrying about Big Brother and we should have been watching out for Mr. Clean.

A Quote We Like . . . James Madison, Speech in the Virginia Convention, 1788. "I believe there are more instances of the abridgment of the freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachments of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations."

'Capt. Kirk' Swaps Starship Enterprise For Horse

By JOSEPH THESKEN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — William Shatner was talking about his new series, "Barbary Coast," but the conversation soon got around to that phenomenon of the TV world, "Star Trek."

Even though the show's been off the air over five years, it has been flourishing in reruns. Fan clubs, reminiscent of Hollywood's heyday, have sprung up all over the country. There has been an aura of science-religion surrounding the show.

Shatner shook his head when I asked him about the fanaticism that has grown up around "Star Trek." He guided the Enterprise through a galaxy of crises as Capt. Kirk.

"I really don't understand it," he said.

"I recently attended two of the 'Star Trek' conventions in New York—they have them all over the country, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Diego (Calif.). Frankly, it was an experience that was perhaps unique.

"I was asked to appear in an auditorium of some 8,000 to 10,000 people, there just because of 'Star Trek.' They were crazed. I don't know why the fanaticism has attached itself to the show. You wouldn't believe what they have at these conventions.

"Booths are set up all over the hotel, selling anything that had to do, even remotely, with 'Star Trek,' from T-shirts to books to rings, you name it. They are selling vast quantities of the stuff. People who had no connection with the series are making fortunes on it.

"Why this is happening defies rational explanation.

"It could be because these fans are dissatisfied with the world the way it is and think 'Star Trek' had the answers. Or it could be that people are aficionados of the show, just as some are wrapped up in stereo equipment. I don't know."

Shatner is on firmer ground when he's talking about "Barbary Coast." He and Doug McClure of "The Virginian" will co-star in this period piece set in colorful San Francisco during the 1870s.

He will be playing Jeff Cable, an undercover agent working for the governor of California, using a variety of disguises to track down the villain. McClure will be Cash Conover, the operator of the Golden Gate Casino.

"It will be an action-adventure show, but it will be fun," he explained. "It will be a droll, amusing western. By the way, we'll be the only western on the air.

"As such, we'll be going after the 'Gunsmoke' fans."

McClure also was present during the interview, but he let Shatner do most of the talking. He did add this comment: "There has always been a great market for westerns. People look upon them as authentic Americana."

He should know. For nine years he was riding the range, branding the cattle and sleeping under the stars in "The Virginian." Before that, he was in "Overland Trail," another western. In "Barbary Coast," you'll be seeing him on horseback occasionally, but he will be spending most of his time riding herd on his casino employes.

Both McClure and Shatner are well aware of "Barbary Coast" being slotted into the new "family hour" time, on Mondays at 8 p.m. As such, they must steer clear of violence so the kids can watch the show without having nightmares.

So how do you depict the raw, rowdy and bawdy Barbary Coast without violence? It won't be easy. Shatner said he thinks it can be done.

"In the pilot, for example, I had to get rid of this heavy," he noted. "I shot him with my derringer and he fell into a manhole and drifted off to sea.

"The next day, after the rushes were seen by the producer and director, the scene was changed. I was able to get rid of the heavy without violence. I and my partner duped him and he fell down the manhole and into the water. It accomplished the same thing, it was amusing, but it wasn't violent."

Midland Native Successful Artist

KANSAS CITY—When Mary Ann Odom, a native of Midland, Tex., speaks of strawberries and rainbows, she is talking not just about beautiful things, she's talking about her work.

She is a successful artist, although you won't find her works hanging in galleries. However, there's a good chance you have wrapped a present with her original gift wrap designs or served a picnic dinner or had a children's party using Odom-designed paper partyware.

Miss Odom is one of the small but prestigious group of stylists at Hallmark Cards in Kansas City, where her unique design touch is as familiar to the staff as that of a Picasso or a Dali.

It is important to her, as it is to any creative person, that her work be accepted. But her career rides on a different kind of art critic—the American consumer who purchases what the greeting card industry calls "social expression products."

George Parker, vice president for creative services at Hallmark, says a Mary Ann Odom design virtually spells success at the consumer level. "Her designs have a broad appeal to consumers in both age and taste and we depend on her expertise," he adds.

Although Miss Odom is proud of her achievements in design, she says the few times she has "bombed out" keep her humble. The percentages, however, show she has no worries. That's where the strawberries and rainbows come in.

Many of her successful designs, including her newest gift wrap design, have used strawberries (her favorite food and design), and the rainbow reference represents her penchant for bright, colorful patterns.

A graduate of Texas Woman's University in interior design, Miss Odom says her family back in Midland thinks every Hallmark product with a strawberry on it is hers.

While she was visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Odom, a few years ago, her mother pulled her aside and confided that the food she craved most during her pregnancy with Mary Ann was strawberries.

Although Miss Odom doesn't necessarily believe in such omens, she says, "I'm glad the food wasn't pickles or knackwurst."

Flight Inspires Space Cocktail

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Apollo astronauts were told by a ground controller today that a new cocktail has been introduced in London in honor of the joint Apollo-Soyuz space mission.

"Sounds great," replied astronaut Vance Brand.

Hobby Names Trio To Advisory Unit

AUSTIN (AP) — State Sens. Bill Patman, D-Ganado; Peyton McKnight, D-Tyler, and Grant Jones, D-Abilene, have been appointed to the Joint Advisory Committee on Government Operations.

The committee will study the organization of state agencies and departments and develop proposals to improve the state government's structure. The senators were appointed Friday by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe will appoint nine non-legislators to the committee, and the speaker of the House and the secretary of state each will appoint three members to the committee.

Fund-Raising Drive Preparations Begin

The Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale began preparations for its 1975-76 fund-raising campaign last week with a workshop and dinner at the symphony rehearsal hall at Midland Air Terminal.

Cooper Appearing In Play Starring Mickey Rooney

PHOENIX — David Cooper, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Cooper of Midland, Tex., is now appearing here in "Three Goats and a Blanket," a new play starring Mickey Rooney.

The play closes the Windmill Dinner Theatre here Aug. 10 and opens a five-week run in Oklahoma City Aug. 26.

Cooper will be appearing in Dallas and Austin with Rooney in September and October in a play not yet announced.

Cooper played David Thoreau in the Midland Community Theatre's production of "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail" several years ago.

In recent months, he has appeared with Robert Horton and Vivian Vance.

Getting Job Tough Work For Students Fresh Out Of School These Days

Copley News Service

For the student fresh out of school getting a job is a tough proposition these days.

Considering the present state of the economy and the high unemployment rate, it takes perseverance, charm and some uncommon ingenuity to find paying employment.

With so many students also on the search for a working wage the competition is tougher than ever.

No matter what type of job a student is looking for, he must be prepared to accept a minimal wage. A college student, unless he is extremely lucky and is able to seek out a position that will allow time for classes and study and still pay $3 an hour, must be ready to settle for $2, the current minimum.

College placement offices and campus bulletin boards have traditionally been the best places for students to start looking for jobs. However, the variety of work offered is poor.

Sometimes the college itself is in the market for part-time help for such jobs as bookstore cashiers, grounds maintenance personnel, science lab cleanup crews or building watchmen. Local businessmen, too, sometimes advertise on campus bulletin boards for help. Nowadays such jobs are quickly snatched up. It's more a matter of being at the right place at the right time. Best advice to the young work-seeker is to be on your toes and have your eagle eyes open as you scan those 3x5-inch cards.

Even if you are the first one to apply for the job, the chances are that the potential employer will have several others lined up for interviews before he makes his decision.

Many students, for want of more regular, settled kinds of jobs, have tried their hand at door-to-door selling or have set up in business for themselves as gardeners, painters and odd jobbers. For gals there's always the popular standby—baby-sitting. Others perform shopping chores for busy housewives, serve as companions to the elderly or readers for the blind.

Some enterprising young people have made money out of such ideas as running a portrait studio in a garage catering to kids, doing minor house remodeling and repair work and running off personalized notebook paper and business cards on hand-cranked presses.

For those with a creative bent there's the field of arts and crafts. Making paper flowers, jewelry, candles, and producing attractive, salable decoupage are some of the ideas that have brought in the needed cash.

Parents Can Help Lessen Trauma Of Starting School

Copley News Service

Professional educators advise that the most important thing parents can do is to read to their children—and to listen to them. It will go a long way toward helping them make the adjustments that will be necessary in the days ahead.

Teachers are conscious that they cannot satisfy the individual needs of 30 or more boys and girls in a class, but they believe parents can play an important role.

Answer: "Nothing."

Instead, they say, parents should take trouble to learn how to question youngsters, to get them to act out what happened in school, to ask them what fun things happened.

The first day in school is particularly tough on the kindergarten-age tot of 5 or under.

One way of making it easier for the child to cope with this entirely new experience is for a parent to take him to the school for an advance look at the classroom, to show the youngster what the room looks like and how to get to and from home.

Having at least two adults in the kindergarten classroom tends to give a child a better sense of security and therefore helps toward his adjustment.

Some principals, following the theory that two heads are better than one, team children in order to lessen the possibility that one or both will be lost.

Going to a new school for the first time is usually difficult no matter what the age. Again, the parent can help by listening to a youngster's problems and drawing out what happens during a crucial day-to-day situation away from home.

Dialogue, one of the most overworked words in the language, does nevertheless apply accurately to the need for communication between parent and child.

One Problem After Another

BELVEDERE, Calif. (AP) — George Gazulis's problems began in Belvedere in 1973 when he applied for permit to build a home on a small, legal but very steep lot.

Before the city council got through checking ordinances Gazulis had to narrow his home to 20 feet in width to comply with a setback of 10 feet in the rear yard.

Then came the problem of how to wash two large picture windows on a two-and-a-half story house when he has no place to stand. He asked for the right to build a 30-inch catwalk without railings across the window wall of the house on each story so window washers would have some place to stand. The planning commission agreed but the neighbors put up so much opposition the commission backed down.

That was too much for Gazulis and it is beginning to look as if he is going to have to live in a dirty fishbowl.

Midlanders Aid Senior Citizens

A number of Midland's senior citizens who are unable to prepare meals for various reasons have a group of sincerely dedicated men and women to thank for at least one hot meal a day.

The program, Midland Meals on Wheels, is sponsored by Midland Senior Citizens, Inc., a nonprofit organization whose purpose is to serve the elderly of the community.

Volunteers, the "wheels" that make possible this much needed service, are recruited from the community through church groups. These volunteers have delivered meals at noon daily Monday through Friday each week the year around since September 1973.

There are other persons equally important to the program; the ones involved in a special orientation program presented to new drivers each month, the ones who prepare the meals, the Food Service staff of Midland Memorial Hospital, the florists who provide flowers throughout the year, the organizations which create tray favors, and last, but not least, the persons who contribute financial support.

Volunteers work in teams of two — a driver and a hostess for each route. The drivers are asked to participate the same day each week for one month whenever possible. They spend approximately one hour making deliveries each day they drive, and may be men as well as women. Responsible teenagers are welcomed as drivers during school vacations.

Churches involved are Trinity Presbyterian Church, Grace Lutheran Church, Crestview Baptist Church, Midland Lutheran Church, St. Nicholas' Episcopal Church, St. Ann's Catholic Church, First Baptist Church, Fannin Terrace Baptist Church, First Christian Church, St. Paul's United Methodist Church, and Church Women United, composed of First United Methodist Church, Memorial Christian Church, St. Luke's United Methodist Church, St. Mark's United Methodist Church and Asbury United Methodist Church.

Contributing florists are Mid-

OTHER RECIPIENTS — Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cheek are receiving their hot mid-day meal from July volunteers, Mrs. Kenneth Bevers and Mrs. Bob Yates, representing Fannin Terrace Baptist Church. Recipients will receive meals for holidays falling on regular delivery days, and may enroll for whatever length of time or variation of delivery schedule is best suited to individual needs.

Thomas O'Brien Marries Susan Jane Guillaume

DALLAS—Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Borue O'Brien Jr., who were married at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Spring Valley United Methodist Church here, will reside in Midland after a trip to Port Isabel.

The bride, the former Susan Jane Guillaume of Dallas, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Guillaume, Dallas. She and the bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. B. O'Brien of 3308 Stanolind St., Midland, are graduates of The University of Texas-Austin. He will be a trainee in the Trust Department of The Midland National Bank. The bride was a member of Delta Delta Delta social sorority.

Dr. Don Benton performed the double ring ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white Qiana styled with long sleeves and Empire waistline. Seed pearls and beads accented the bodice and back yoke. The skirt was floor-length. A seed pearl cap held her tiered chapel-length veil of illusion.

Debbie Butler was the maid of honor, and Barbara Oster and Pat Galbraith of Dallas, Meg Orwig of Midland and Jennie Kretzer of Fayetteville, Ark., were bridesmaids.

The best man was Mark Langston of Midland. Jim May of Pittsburgh, Pa., brother of the bridegroom, James Cooke and Curtis Parsley of Austin and Gil Guillaume, brother of the bride, were the groomsmen. Dave Bearden of Midland was the usher.

land Floral Service Inc. Mildred's Flowers, The Peppertree, Buddy's Flowers and A-1 Floral Co.

An orientation program is conducted each month for new volunteer drivers. They are enlightened on security and safety in the areas they cover, including how to protect themselves, what to look for and not to look for, first aid tips and what to do if they are involved in a situation they are unable to handle. They also are familiarized with the four routes now in effect, which cover each direction of the city.

Meals on Wheels recipients may be any Midland senior citizen unable to prepare meals due to illness, disability, recent surgery, living alone or other like causes.

Clients are interviewed by the dietitian prior to enrollment, and may receive any diet, regular or special, recommended by a physician, at no extra cost. Recipients may pay for meals on a scale and time schedule, which is determined by individual circumstances.

The director-dietitian will consult with the recipient upon request and they will be visited regularly by the outreach worker, who also is the dietetic assistant.

Currently, 63 Midland senior citizens are enrolled in the program. The service will be expanded to accommodate up to 100 persons during the remainder of this year and 1976.

The program is financed through contributions from recipients, an allocation of revenue sharing funds from Midland County commissioners, the Texas State Welfare Dept. and contributions from concerned individuals and community organizations. County subsidy is paid directly to Midland Memorial Hospital to help defray the cost of food.

Anyone interested in learning more about Meals on Wheels is encouraged to call the Senior Services Office, 682-7577, for further information. Visits with the staff and observations trips will be arranged upon request.

Contributions designated for Meals on Wheels may be directed to Senior Citizens, Inc., P.O. Box 5724. They are tax deductible.

Newcastle Women Douse Coals

They have formed what may be a first in Texas, an all-female volunteer fire fighting department. They have also created a new fire fighter position — designated babysitter.

"We are the backup for the regular rural fire department," says the group's chief, Mrs. Thetus Routon. "The men are hard to find during the day if the alarm goes off. We are not trying to beat them out of a job."

The group decided to organize a week after a fire gutted the home of Mrs. Irene Brunn in this north central Texas community.

"We decided we needed to get something done," said Mrs. Routon. "We want to be protected. We are almost without protection during the day. Only women are in town during the day."

"We took our vows and kept them," Mrs. Saitz said.

They will serve three years as dentists with a rank of captain in the U.S. Army in Stuttgart, Germany, before setting up a family clinic in Oregon.

Pearce, wore a high-waisted, half-belted formal-length gown of white re-embroidered Chantilace, imported silk crystalline organza and peau de soie. The bodice was lace over organza, and the lantern sleeves had pearl outlined cuffs. Scattered pearls and pearled appliques enhanced the neckline and bodice and extended to the lower front. The full-length train was outlined with pearls. Her full-length veil was held by a headpiece of satin roses and pearls. The bride wore her grandmother's pearl necklace and carried a cascade of Phalaenopsis orchids, white roses, stephanotis, ivy and baby's breath atop a Bible.

Carolyn Pearce attended her sister as maid of honor. Best man was Calvin Glover, brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

Bridesmaid was Beth Moore, sister of the bridegroom. Ushering the guests were Jimmy Rinehart of Fort Worth and Gary Roberson of Waxahachie, both cousins of the bridegroom, and Don Pearce, brother of the bride.

Teacher's Query Inspires Publication

NOVATO, Calif. (AP) — Ruth Lescohier is a school teacher who became a publisher because she asked a question of her students. It was: "How did they come to name Throckmorton Avenue in Mill Valley?"

The students' efforts and research resulted in a book containing 28 pages, hand lettered and put together by Mrs. Lescohier, in the tradition dating back to the Middle Ages monasteries. It is called "The Search for Samuel Throckmorton Avenue, a Mill Valley Story."

The book tells the history of a man who gave Southern Marin County such place names as Homestead Valley and the forts on the Marin Headlands.

Cover-Girl Winner Ponders Future

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Until she was named 1975 High School Cover Girl with prospects of becoming a model, Pam Tiemeyer, 18, of Wichita, Kan., had expected to be an X-ray technician.

"But I guess I've always wanted to be a model, too," said the pretty brown-eyed winner, who hadn't given her chance much thought.

At Cinandre's, the hairdresser, where she had been coifed the day before for the contest's finals in New York, everybody was telling her that they knew she couldn't miss being chosen. As makeup man Joey Mills brought her oval-shape face to cover-girl perfection with foundation, color on her high cheekbones, emphasizing her eyes, and so on, someone said, "goodbye, X-ray technician, hello model." That afternoon she would sit for the cover-girl photograph that would be used on the October issue of Co-Ed magazine.

Then, too, Wilhelmina, the model agent, would take a look at the pictures and decide Pam's chances for fashion modeling. "She might make an exception about my height," said Pam. At 5 feet 5½ inches she is not quite tall enough for modeling.

But Pam's other options were still in her mind. The two-year nursing course for the technician's job offered by Wichita hospitals "would lead to something she could fall back on some day" even if she gets married. More kids are planning that way with the future in mind, she explained.

The classes are filled at the schools of nursing but her previous hospital experience might help get her admitted. She has worked in the kitchen of a hospital and was a candy striper in the eighth grade "even getting to do blood pressure."

She has been a volunteer worker in many areas since she was in the eighth grade and at her high school volunteerism was a requirement for graduation. But she had fun, too, as a cheerleader and active participant in drama.

She particularly likes working with the elderly, dressing their hair and braiding it in pigtails.

"But it gets so you relate to them. I was very upset over the passing of one old lady," she explained.

The loneliness of old people sticks in her mind. Some have no contact with their families. She remembers one old man whose family never came to see him. When she was in the ninth grade she played the guitar and a friend sang for him.

Only one of the 10 cover-girl finalists had visited New York before and most had never been on a plane or stayed in a hotel. At the Waldorf Astoria where Pam shared a room with Allison Nunn of Galax, Va., the two returned from a night out to find their room looked different.

"We couldn't see our clothes or bags or anything when we entered our room and we thought we saw someone hiding behind a shower curtain . . ."

Imaginations rampant, they ran out in the hall to find a security guard only to learn that a night maid had visited them and had put all their clothes and bags in closets and drawers.

You really can't take the farm out of the girl, Pam admits. In fact most of her farm friends and those who've moved from farms want to go back to them some day. Born on a farm, although she grew up in Wichita, Pam still loves a farm, although it would be nice to have the farm and a city place, too.

In fact even though she and Allison had decided they would like to come back to New York some day for careers they would "like to be able to go home a lot." Her father works on her grandfather's farm near their home.

Big Wine Bottles Have Other Uses

Copley News Service

Travelers are always warned to carry a water bottle with them, whether it is a hiking canteen, picnic Thermos or canvas bag in the car.

Even at home, it is a good idea to save handy, large empty containers for storing purposes. They can be decorated for a number of uses and are less expensive — as well as more available — then buying extra pitchers for keeping fruit juice or other cooling beverages.

In fact, empty juice bottles from the supermarket can become excellent water jars, as do big wine bottles or thoroughly cleaned plastic bleach containers.

You can decorate these with cut-and-paste pictures from magazines, scraps of wallpaper or contact paper. Kept outside near your play area, many trips to the kitchen sink are saved, and a thirst-quenching drink is handier than from the garden hose.

DearAbby

—By Abigail van Buren

Wedding Ring Can Be Dangerous

DEAR ABBY: I am the plant manager of a large industrial company employing over 3,000 men, and their safety is my concern.

Enclosed is a letter that, I am told, appeared in your column about 10 years ago.

How much would you charge us to reprint this letter in our company paper? It could prevent accidents and perhaps save lives. Respectfully,

CHICAGOAN

The column:

"DEAR ABBY: I am one of those foolish wives who insisted that my husband wear his wedding ring at all times. My husband is a maintenance mechanic, and this is what happened. Yesterday, I received a call informing me that my husband was at the hospital! While jumping off a construction truck, he caught his ring on a piece of metal, and his finger was practically torn off. I was told he was lucky he wasn't killed since he lost his balance and fell under the wheels of the truck.

"Abby, please put this in your column as a warning to other women who want their husbands to wear their wedding rings to work.

AL'S WIFE

"DEAR WIFE: Thank you for your letter. And while we're on the subject, read this one:

"DEAR ABBY: When my husband and I were married we had a double-ring ceremony, and he promised he would never take his wedding ring off. And he never did. After a few years he gained a little weight and couldn't get it off. My husband was an electrician.

"Well, to make a long and very tragic story short, his wedding ring wore a tiny hole through his insulated glove and a fatal contact was made. He died instantly. When his lifeless body was examined, the only sign of injury was a small burn where his wedding ring encircled his finger.

ELECTRICIAN'S WIDOW

"So...dear wife, if your husband works around machines or electricity, tell him to leave ALL rings at home— —if you really love him, that is.

"Rings and other types of jewelry for women and men working with machinery and electricity are a major problem in industry. Sentiment is a poor excuse for wearing a ring when it can cause the loss of a finger, hand, arm or even a life."

DEAR CHICAGOAN: Be my guest. No charge. (P.S. And the same goes for any other company that would find it useful.)

DEAR ABBY: When a man and his wife have both broken the marriage vows through adultery and want to start over again and keep their marriage vows sacred, do they have to get married again?

Wouldn't they be living in an adulterous relationship if they lived together as man and wife after having broken their marriage vows?

BROKEN VOWS

DEAR BROKEN: Though adultery has been committed, the marriage is still considered legal and valid in the eyes of God and man. However, if a couple wants to start fresh, I think renewing their marriage vows is an excellent idea.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY in care of this newspaper. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Residents Armed With Panic Buttons

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 100 residents of the Lower East Side are being armed with "panic buttons" to trigger nearby sirens and summon neighbors to the rescue in case of a crime. The devices are tiny transistor radios that, upon being pressed, send signals to receivers in nearby apartments which in turn touch off the sirens. To cover the $5,000 cost, 135 residents paid $10 each for their panic buttons, additional money was raised at a block party and the city is putting up $3 for each dollar put up locally.

Cautiously optimistic police think that false alarms will be the biggest problem for the system.

Perfume Should Suit Body

By SUSAN KIRVIN
Copley News Service

What makes a fragrance a success when you wear it?

It could be the way you select your perfume or cologne.

Many women and men, anxious to try a new fragrance, are choosing scents all wrong. Just liking the smell of a perfume or cologne shouldn't be the sole reason you wear it.

"Usually a person will spray it on and smell it immediately," says Marilyn Speck, who manages the perfume department at a large store.

"You have to wear it on the skin for awhile, about 20 or 30 minutes. If you smell it at the counter after you put it on, you won't smell the essence of the perfume."

By 20 or 30 minutes, the warmth of the skin has excreted the full body of the perfume, she says.

"You should never try more than three fragrances on at one time or you'll lose your sense of smell," says Inge Yeager, owner of a cosmetics studio.

Often personal appearance is a key factor to consider when selecting a perfume or cologne.

"Usually when a man comes in to buy perfume for his wife or girl friend, I ask what she looks like," says Mrs. Yeager. "Is she tall, dark, light or blonde? What's her coloring? With experience, you learn to match a person with a perfume."

According to Nancy Hagen, a perfume chemist from New York City, most blondes have fewer oils in their skin so lighter perfumes have a tendency to lift off their skin.

Heavier florals, Oriental scents and woodsy or mossy notes are better for brunettes, she says in an Associated Press wire story.

Another factor to consider when choosing a fragrance is the season.

In warmer weather there is more interest in lighter, citrus scents, while heavier scents are likely to have more appeal during the winter.

One of the biggest challenges in the cosmetic industry has been brewing scents for men. Many men, says Mrs. Hagen, are turned on by "animal scents and sweet vanilla-like notes."

But, she adds, like women, most men are unsure of their scent preferences and often wind up buying the most popular selling cologne whether it's suited for their body chemistry or not.

No matter what perfume a person selects, it will not smell the same on any two people, says Miss Speck.

Many women complain that their perfume doesn't last after a few hours. Usually the problem stems from a person's skin chemistry, skin type or soap preference.

But to find the cologne or perfume best suited to you, salespersons suggest experimenting with different fragrances By experimenting, you save money, time and wasted purchases.

"It's important for customers to try on a perfume and wear it awhile before they buy it," says Mrs. Yeager. "Wait and see if you feel comfortable with a perfume before making the final decision to buy it."

Ideas Given For Entry Area

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. We live in an apartment that has no entry hall. We come directly into our 15x18-foot living room. We do not plan to stay long enough to go to any expense, such as buying a divider for the room, but I would like to create some entry area. Can you give us some inexpensive ideas and also some that will not mar the walls and ceiling? — L.V.C.

A. I think one of the best ways is to consider arranging your furniture so that you create a visual block as you open the front door. This can be done sometimes with a sofa or a chair placed so that a traffic pattern is established around the furniture. If you want a high divider, consider a high-backed chair such as a wing-back.

Or, if you have a sofa that could be arranged to create the blockage, try backing the sofa with a long, high sofa table on which you can place some attractive accessories for eye appeal. If you want to add height, choose a tall plant or a large candelabra, for example, to put on the table.

Ham In Shells

In a saucepan, brown one cup ham strips, two cups sliced mushrooms, and one medium clove of garlic, minced in ¼ cup butter or margarine. Stir in two cans of condensed cream of chicken soup, and ½ cup light cream. Add two cups cooked, peeled, and deveined shrimp and one-third cup chopped parsley. Heat, stirring occasionally, Serve in patty shells.

COUPLE BETROTHED — Mr. and Mrs. Wendell E. Fowler of 1419 Ventura St., anounce the engagement of their daughter, Vicki, to James Allen Hagler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Darrell H. Hagler of Seguin. The wedding date is set for 7 p.m. Aug. 29 in St. Luke's United Methodist Church. The bride-elect is a graduate of Columbia Secretarial School and is employed with Rocky Ford Moving Vans, Inc. Her fiance, a graduate of Mississippi State University, is employed as a petroleum engineer for Continental Oil Co. here.

Crab Salad

Combine one cup drained and sliced crab with three chopped tomatoes, ⅔ cup chopped green peppers, one-third chopped celery, ¾ cup chopped green onion, one teaspoon vinegar, juice of ½ lemon ¼ teaspoon tarragon and salt and pepper to taste. Chill and serve on crisp lettuce.

Making Syrup

Make a syrup of two parts sugar and one part water. Color and flavor it with red hot cinnamon candies. Quarter and remove core from apples and cook until done in this syrup. Arrange them in sections to form petals and fill the center of each flower with green gum drops or cream cheese balls. Garnish pork roast, chops or ham.

Query Made On Sofa, Draperies

Copley News Service

Q. We have French and Italian furniture in our living and dining rooms with a color scheme of olive green and gold. The room is entered through a hallway with walls in an olive and white print. Our living room rug is olive green and two chairs were covered by mistake in gold crushed velet. Now we need to recover the French sofa but in what color and material? Also, I need draperies and what color should they be? The walls are pale green. — L.P.

A. You apparently like an elegant look with soft colors. I would suggest you use a green, white, gold and apricot stripe on the sofa. You might use matching fabric for the draperies with cornice boxes if you want that look.

This would look well with your pale green walls and green rug if you select the green in the stripe with care. The apricot will give you some extra color for using in accessories to add drama and more life to the room.

Solution Cleans Floor Tile

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. We have a simulated red brick floor tile in our family room which has been laid over a cement floor. White deposits have formed on the red floor tile which is very unsightly. This has occurred in an area near the outside walls. I feel it is undoubtedly lime deposits caused by moisture under the slab floor.

I have the problem under control because of the pouring of a cement border about 18 inches below grade along the outside wall of the family room. As the red simulated brick floor is not smooth and has indentations, sanding or scraping would not remove the white buildup.

Is there a chemical which will solve the problem without damaging the tile? What are your recommendations? — Paul W.G.

A. I presume your simulated red brick floor is a vinyl tile. Concrete is porous and the deposits, called efflorescence, is undoubtedly caused by moisture working up through the concrete under the floor tile. To clean, try a solution of two-thirds cup of trisodium phosphate, one-third cup detergent, mixed in one quart of household detergent and then add this to three quarts of water. Use a stiff brush or very fine steel wool. Be sure to rinse thoroughly and dry.

The floor can then be waxed. However, prior to the waxing, the application of a sealer suitable for resilient tile could be used, then wax.

Unless the source of the moisture has been corrected, this condition could reoccur. But in your case, the pouring of the cement border along the outside wall should solve the problem.

Q. Do you have any information on cleaning anodized exterior aluminum. Washing with cleaners such as a kitchen abrasive type removes the top dirt, but does not seem to get to the winter soot and ground-in dirt. — James L.A., Flint, Mich.

A. I think your problem calls for what Aluminum Corp. of America, better known as Alcoa, terms "heavy-duty cleaning." This means three types of cleaning, to be used in the order as follows: First, use a heavy-duty cleaner. Second, use an etching chemical cleaner. Third, use a heavy-duty abrasive cleaner and an etching chemical.

Sheinwold On Bridge

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Outfox Opponent By Playing Low

If you play bridge often you will find yourself in a position to profit from this article a few dozen times per year. You will be defending; declarer will have a repeatable finesse that is going to lose; and, if you take my word for it, you will let declarer's first finesse succeed without the slightest pause for thought.

Opening lead—♡ K

If you want to take time out to sniff at North's free raise to two spades, I'll wait for you. North would have preferred raising with an ace or a couple of kings, but all he held was what his partner had dealt him.

A player who doesn't raise with a light hand in this situation will find that his opponents steal a great many hands from him. He'll also discover that his partner, afraid of being stolen blind, will make many risky rebids; and sooner or later one of those rebids will go for a nice juicy number. In the long run, oddly enough, it's safer to bid than to pass with hands like North's.

South took the first trick with the ace of hearts, ruffed the ten of hearts in dummy and led the queen of spades from dummy for a finesse. West played a low spade with just the right lack of expression.

It was important for West to make his play as though he had never heard of a king of spades. In most situations of this kind it is part of the plot to make declarer think that his finesse has succeeded. If you put your finger alongside of your nose with a crafty air and state that you can afford to wait, you are missing the point.

When the hand was played, South thought that his finesse had succeeded. He led dummy's last trump to repeat the finesse—but this time West discovered the king of spades in his hand.

Naturally, West led a third round of hearts, forcing South to ruff. This was really the reason for the deceptive refusal to take the king of spades—but West hadn't thought about it at the time. He simply knew that the finesse was repeatable, and he took my word for it that his best course was to play low without the slightest appearance of thought.

South drew the last missing trump with something less than joy. He knew he had been had. He still held one trump, but he had to knock out two aces. When he knocked out the ace of diamonds, a heart return would force out his last trump. Then the defenders would save the ace of clubs and a heart to defeat the contract.

South would make the contract if West took the first trump trick with the king. If West led another heart, dummy could ruff; and South would keep his full trump length. (If West led anything else, the outcome would be the same.) South would have time to draw trumps and force out both of the missing aces.

South would likewise make the contract if West made it clear that he was refusing the first trump trick. South would take the ace of spades next instead of repeating the finesse. Then, leaving the king of spades at large, South would knock out the ace of diamonds.

West could win, draw a third round of trumps with the king and then lead a heart to force out South's fourth trump. But South would then lead a club to drive out the ace of clubs, protected by his last trump.

Once a year you will encounter a hand in which you must win the first trick as a defender even though the finesse is repeatable. You will muff this hand if you follow my rule of refusing the trick without the slightest pause for thought. But if you stop to think you will let declarer know what is going on; and that will cost you several dozen hands.

Gun Booby Trap Setter Charged In Man's Death

The Allegheny County coroner Friday said Steven M. Kayafas, 22, of New Kensington, was killed by a blast in the stomach when he apparently tried to enter the house of Sylvester Shaw of suburban Creighton early Thursday.

Shaw, 71, has been charged with murder in the incident. Police said he had wired a shotgun to the door of his house after he was burglarized several times.

SW Bell Agrees To Give Hill Expert Data

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.'s chief executive officer in Texas has agreed to give Atty. Gen. John Hill's telephone rate expert all the data the expert needs to decide what will be a reasonable increase in intrastate long distance rates, Hill says.

Hill said Friday he met for 45 minutes Thursday with Charles Marshall of Dallas.

Hill's expert, Pat Loconto, testified in state district court that Bell's proposed $45 million rate increase on intrastate calls probably would give Bell 17 to 20 per cent return on Bell's investment. That rate of return for a monopoly that has no competition to meet is unconscionable, Loconto said.

Hill won a temporary injunction blocking the increase at the state district court level, lost on Bell's appeal to the court of appeals, but won again in the Texas Supreme Court, which ruled on it recently.

"Mr. Marshall expressed the desire to present to Mr. Loconto additional data, and I told him this was fine, provided he gave Mr. Loconto the data that Mr. Loconto desired, because I want Mr. Loconto to go over all of the figures and to satisfy himself that he had everything before him that he needed to make a decision," Hill said.

"I further told Mr. Marshall that Mr. Loconto had consistently advised me that he recognized that the telephone company was entitled to a rate increase in this area, and that there were certain ranges of figures that he would not be able to contest," Hill said.

Loconto has indicated the work could be done by the end of July, he said.

Hill also said he told Marshall "we want to talk at some time concerning the question of no more increases until this (new state) utilities commission gets under way in September 1976."

One of Hill's strongest arguments in the case was that the Bell office in Dallas asked the Bell office in St. Louis for permission to raise intrastate rates $30 million, but that the St. Louis office sent back "marching orders" to increase them by $45 million. No explanation was offered by the St. Louis office, he said, and this indicated the increase was unreasonable.

If Bell and Hill fail to settle the case out of court, Hill will have to prove at a district court hearing on a permanent injunction that the $45 million increase is unreasonable. The Supreme Court said in its opinion Hill's "task in this regard will be formidable."

Judge To Rule On Argonaut Request Monday

AUSTIN (AP) — Argonaut Insurance Co. will learn Monday whether it can raise medical malpractice premiums without giving the 90 days' notice required under a new law.

Retired Criminal Appeals Judge Wesley Dice said Friday he would rule at 1:30 p.m. Monday on Argonaut's suit to nullify the new law.

Dice announced at the conclusion of a two-day hearing on Argonaut's motion for a temporary injunction that he would take the case under advisement, study the briefs over the weekend and rule Monday.

Argonaut contends the law, effective June 3, is unconstitutional because Argonaut had the right before June 3 to raise its rates immediately, so the law is illegally retroactive to 90 days before that date.

Mary Joe Carroll, Agronaut's lawyer, said the company had no effective rate at all on June 3 because it had suspended writing malpractice insurance pending a study. The firm lost $83 million on malpractice cases across the country last year, she said.

Executive Asst. Atty. Gen. John Odam told the judge, "The law in this case is simple. It became effective on June 3. It says, 'Hereafter, if you want to raise your rates, you're free to do so, but you've got to give your policyholders 90 days' notice.' "

Odam said the company had failed to exhaust its administrative remedies before the State Board of Insurance before going to court.

Thunderbirds Due Aug. 3 At Big Spring

BIG SPRING—The U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds will be up in the wild blue yonder here Sunday, Aug. 3, for the Bicentennial Celebration Open House at Webb Air Force Base.

The Thunderbirds will execute a few aerial maneuvers at 11 a.m. Featured flight line activities will begin shortly after noon and the feature show will begin at 2:30 p.m. with a walk-by inspection of local dignitaries. The aerial demonstration is planned for 3 p.m.

Static displays will take place on the parking ramp near Base Operations in the vicinity of the control tower. Numerous exhibits are planned just north of Base Operations. Modern aircraft of the Army, Navy, Marines and Air Force will be on display.

The U.S. Air Force Band of the West from Lackland AFB will begin its concert on the flight line at 1:30 p.m. Other demonstrations will also be featured at that time.

The day's events will culminate with the 4:30 p.m. dedication of the base's new airmen's dining hall in memory of Capt. Stephen L. Bennett, a former Webb AFB student killed in Vietnam.

U.S. Rep. Omar Burleson is tentatively scheduled to make the dedicatory remarks. Other honored guests will be Capt. Bennett's widow and daughter.

Before departing at 5 p.m., the public will be able to view some of the visiting aircraft in flight and obtain autographs and personal greetings from members of the Thunderbirds.

Texas Judge Orders Alleged SLA Member Be Extradited

HOUSTON (AP) — A state judge has ordered Thero Lavon Wheeler, alleged member of the Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA), extradited to California.

California authorities seek Wheeler, 30, as a prison escapee, and State District Court Judge Andrew Jefferson ordered the extradition Friday following a hearing.

Sherman Ross, Wheeler's attorney, said he would appeal. He said one avenue of appeal would involve an informal administrative hearing before Texas Secretary of State Mark White in which Wheeler would ask for asylum in Texas.

The attorney said if White makes a favorable decision and Wheeler gains asylum from Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe then Jefferson's decision is moot.

Ross said he also could take the case to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Ross said there is no evidence Wheeler was ever deeply involved with the SLA, the group that allegedly kidnaped heiress Patricia Hearst.

"It has never been proved he was even an SLA member," Ross said. "At the most he may have been involved with it in its embryonic stages but he had nothing to do with the kidnaping."

The FBI also has said Wheeler is not suspected of being connected with the alleged kidnaping.

Testimony before Jefferson showed Wheeler worked as a laborer in Houston since April 1974 under the name of Bradley S. Bruce.

Ross said Wheeler escaped from the Vacaville Medical Facility in California in March 1974 because mental stresses placed on him there ruined his health.

He said conditions at the center caused public outcries for change in California's prison system and that the Wheeler case prompted much of the reform attention.

New Boston Crash Kills Teen-Ager

NEW BOSTON, Tex. (AP) — A New Boston teen-ager was killed and four other young persons injured early Saturday in a two-car crash near this Northeast Texas community.

The dead girl was identified as Lisa Foster, 16. She was a passenger in one of the cars.

Swimmer Drowns In Lake At Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas man drowned Friday night while he was swimming in Lake Ray Hubbard, authorities said.

Witnesses said Isaac Newton Weed, 55, was swimming near a marina when he disappeared beneath the surface.

Officials said his body was recovered about an hour later.

KKK Politician Fired From Job

HOUSTON (AP) — Scott Nelson, National Knights of the Ku Klux Klan's vice presidential candidate in the 1976 presidential election, has been fired from his job as a bill collector for a public utilities firm.

Nelson, imperial wizard of the Texas Fiery Knights of the KKK and an announced candidate for mayor of Houston in November's city election, said the dismissal was due to his political activities.

An official of the firm said the action was triggered by Nelson's recent mailing of campaign material to some company executives but added "that was just one of many things."

L. P. Jones, senior vice president of marketing and personnel for Entex, Inc., confirmed Friday Nelson had been dismissed. He declined to discuss it in detail because Nelson gave notice he will file a grievance claim through his union.

Nelson said he mailed campaign brochures "to about a half dozen company officials as well as to 50 prominent businessmen."

A letter from company officials to Nelson outlining the reason for his dismissal said the mailed material contained "slurs to black people of a nature likely to incite racial discord." It said the material and Nelson's actions "violates the company's obligation to the public and its employes."

Nelson, who said he has worked for the company about 15 years and has been active in the KKK for three years, claimed the dismissal was "part of an effort to get me out of the (mayor's) race."

"If I had been a member of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People), I feel this would have been fine with Entex," he said. "They wouldn't have minded."

Nelson denied allegations in the letter he had distributed campaign material on company premises and on company time and had disrupted employe meetings.

Former Dallas Banker Given 5 Years In Prison

DALLAS (AP) — A former Dallas bank officer, who said most of the $500,000 he embezzled helped other people who would have defaulted on loans, has been sentenced in federal court to a five-year prison term followed by three-year's probation.

Donald P. Flynn, 50, a former senior vice president at Republic National Bank here, was sentenced Friday. He pleaded guilty to one count of falsification of funds and one count of misapplication of funds.

"I don't think anybody has come before me who has caused more loss of money," U.S. District Court Judge Sarah T. Hughes told Flynn, formerly of Tulsa, Okla.

Internal Revenue Service reports said Flynn had personally received more than $200,000 of the money, Judge Hughes said. The two-count indictment said Flynn created a fictitious bank account and converted $7,000 of the bank's money to his own use.

Officials estimate the bank lost between $600,000 and $700,000 over a 13-year period.

Flynn moved from Tulsa to Dallas in 1958 to join the bank as a vice president.

Earth Scientists Form Committee To Inform Public

The Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists last week approved the formation of an Education Committee during its national board meeting in Midland.

Sonny Bankhead, national president of SIPES, was named chairman of the committee which is designed to inform persons not directly associated with the oil industry of some of the problems faced by the industry.

Named to the committee were Pat Gratton of Dallas and Harry Miller of Midland, both SIPES national directors.

The committee will be in charge of coordinating local SIPES chapter contacts with key people in the news media and legislatures and administrative offices.

The Natural Resources Information Committee of SIPES, headed by Cy Cantrell of Houston, announced at the meeting a determination to explain to the public the reason for the dire need of the United States to become less dependent on the OPEC producing countries by conserving our own fossil fuels and reducing consumption.

Directors attending the meeting were Jack P. Martin, Lafayette; Martin C. Kelsey and Gratton, both of Dallas; Clem E. George and Miller, both of Midland; Leroy Gatlin of Oklahoma City and Wayne E. Walcher of Wichita, Kan.

Miller Warns Conservation Not Answer

WASHINGTON—Even with maximum conservation efforts that would save 7,000,000 barrels of oil daily in 1985 U. S. oil consumption, domestic crude oil output would have to be increased 5,500,000 barrels daily to reduce dependence on foreign oil to acceptable levels.

This outlook was presented to the Senate Finance Committee last week by C. John Miller of Allegan, Mich., president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

Miller said emphasis on conservation has created a "false assumption by many that we can conserve our way out of our energy problem."

He pointed out that total U. S. petroleum demand in 1985 would be reduced from 28,000,000 barrels daily to 21,000,000 if conservation efforts succeeded in limiting annual growth in domestic demand to two per cent yearly, the goal of the House-passed energy bill on which the Finance committee is holding hearings.

But the IPAA official said domestic production of petroleum liquids has declined by 1,100,000 barrels a day in the last five years while U. S. dependence on imports has almost doubled to 6,500,000 barrels a day.

"Even with the best conservation, the decline in domestic production must be turned around and production must be increased substantially," Miller said, if the nation is to avoid unacceptable dependence on foreign oil.

Assuming that Alaskan North Slope production will provide 2,000,000 barrels daily by 1985, Miller said the downtrend in production in the lower 48 states must be reversed and production increased by 3,500,000 barrels daily to meet expected demand in the mid-80s, "even with maximum conservation efforts."

He said the nation "has the fortunate options of finding and developing the substantial remaining petroleum resources in unexplored areas of the lower 48 states and of greatly increasing oil recovery from known reservoirs through enhanced recovery techniques."

Miller warned that Congress is dealing only with conservation of existing resources, and added that because HR 6860 does nothing to encourage an increased supply of domestic energy, "the long-term effects would be to lock in further unnecessary increases of foreign imports."

He said if the present downtrend in domestic production is not reversed, our production would drop to only 8,500,000 barrels a day in 1985 when demand even under effective conservation would be 21,000,000 barrels.

If massive efforts are not made to reverse the decline in domestic production, he said U. S. dependence on imported oil would reach 50 per cent in 1980 and 60 per cent by 1985.

Advisory Panel Opposes Ford's Increase Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A panel that advises the Federal Energy Administration on consumer interests opposes President Ford's plan to conserve energy by raising oil prices, and a Democratic move to kill the White House program is heading for a vote in the House.

The FEA's Consumer Affairs Special Impact Advisory Committee voted 10 to 1 with two abstentions Thursday to oppose the Ford proposal, panel member Ken Bossong reported Friday.

Bossong said the committee objected to the President's program because it includes no provision to tax the windfall profits that would accrue to the oil companies from the price boost and fails to give tax relief to lower-income families who could be faced with higher fuel costs.

Meanwhile, the House Rules Committee cleared the way for floor action next Tuesday on a Democratic-sponsored resolution which would kill Ford's plan for phasing out price controls on domestic oil over the next 2½ years.

The House then began debate on various other proposals to continue controls on those prices.

Ford's plan calls for phasing out existing price controls, eliminating the two-tier pricing system and letting the price ceiling go up to an estimated $13.50 a barrel for all domestic oil by the end of 1977.

A&M Researchers Develop Program To Fight Blowouts

COLLEGE STATION — The overpressurized rocks that were mostly responsible for the Santa Barbara blowout and oil spill is a spectre that haunts every offshore drilling rig in Texas.

A pair of Texas A&M University researchers think, however, that they've got a handle on how to locate and predict these geological hazards.

Dr. William R. Bryant, a marine geologist, and Dr. L. J. Thompson, a civil engineer, were funded for $50,000 by the U.S. Geological Survey to conduct the investigations.

"Overpressurized sediments occur when the material being deposited on the ocean floor starts to consolidate and traps pockets of water," Thompson explained. "As more sand and sediment are deposited the pressure on the entrapped water increases."

"Now when you drill into one of these high pressure zones it tries to blow the mud, drill stem, and everything else out the top of the oil rig," he pointed out. "These over pressures are common to oil companies at great depths."

"For example, from New Orleans to Corpus Christi, there are many such pockets at the 10,000 to 12,000 foot level," Thompson noted. "Recently, there was a blowout as shallow as 3,000 feet."

"Not only that but overpressured sediments are unstable and subject to slides," he went on. "An understanding of this phenomenon needs to be developed if the overpressured zones that constitute a hazard to offshore structures are to be located.

"As a result, we've laid out a four-year program to attack this problem," Thompson said. "The first year a theory needs to be developed that will predict excess pore pressures for the steady state process. We've got to be able to predict where they will occur."

"The second year's task will be to develop equipment, like a probe, that will allow us to locate the high pressure zones," he declared. "Also this technique might have possibilities as a mapping tool for shallow sediments. The probe will use the relationship between excess pore pressure with temperature, electrical resistivity, sonic velocity and porosity."

"The third year will be spent constructing the probe and the demonstration of its use through mapping continental shelf areas where excess pore pressure might exist," Thompson said. "And, the final year will be spent locating and mapping the zones of high excess pore pressure."

The rest of the staff on the project consists of graduate students Phillip Chen and Robert Chen and one of the most knowledgable men in the world on high pressure zones, Dave Powley. Powley, from AMOCO Oil Company, will serve as an unpaid consultant on the project with his experience of having examined over 4,000 well records studying the deep problem."

New Mexico Areas Lead Basin Drilling

New Mexico counties, with Eddy County and Lea County tied with 26 active rotary rigs, led the count Friday in the Permian Basin rotary rig tally.

The total count for the Southeast New Mexico-West Texas area was 255, one more than the 254 reported one week earlier and six more than the 249 on location one year ago.

Pecos County led in the West Texas activity with 21, while 14 rigs were making hole in Ward County and Sutton County had 12 rigs working.

Slayton's Heart Behaving Normally On Space Mission

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Mission control told Astronaut Donald Slayton last week that the heart condition which kept him grounded ten years has not shown up on the joint Soviet-American space mission.

Slayton, called Deke by fellow astronauts, took over the astronaut training program after being grounded, but never accepted the doctors' verdict.

He took special medication and treatments for several years, and the fibrillation finally disappeared. He was cleared for flight in 1972.

Space agency doctors said Friday that neither the stress of the launch nor weightlessness caused any fibrillation or other heart problems for Slayton.

Before his first space flight, Slayton told reporters, "I always figured they (the doctors) didn't know what the hell they were doing to begin with. I knew I was going to prove it eventually, but I didn't think it was going to take that long."

Judge Won't Stop TSTA Practice Regarding NEA

AUSTIN (AP) — State District Court Judge Jim Meyers has refused to issue an order preventing the Texas State Teachers Association from requiring its members to belong also to the National Education Association.

Three TSTA members who opposed unification with the NEA have the right to take their case to the 3rd Court of Civil Appeals here.

M. Browning Combs of Grand Prairie, Mary Catherine Webster of Ellis County and Charles Pattillo of Reeves County contended in their suit that TSTA had violated its own constitution by holding two referendums on unification within two years.

TSTA members had rejected compulsory NEA membership by a 2-1 margin in 1974 but approved it in a second referendum in May.

Meyers ruled Friday that the referendum questions submitted to the TSTA members were not identical and, therefore, did not violate the organization's constitution.

He said he would delay signing his order to give the three teachers more time to decide whether to appeal. They have 20 days from the signing of the order to file an appeal.

The Dawson County United Way specified a goal of $5,000 and said funds raised in the county are to be used purely on a local level.

The USO, Goodfellows and Family Planning Agency were removed from United Way service. Added were the Salvation Army, Books by Mail and the Southwestern Diabetic Foundation.

Dawson County's goal for the coming drive, set to kick off Oct. 8, is $41,400, an increase of $3,150 over last year. Donald Bryant is the 1975-76 United Way president and Ricky Smith is the local campaign chairman.

Public Lands Can Solve U.S. Energy Crisis, Geologist Says

EDITOR'S NOTE: the following information on oil and gas development on University Lands in West Texas was prepared by The University of Texas System.

If the hundreds of millions of acres of this country's federal lands were handled in the same manner as the 2.1 million acres of University Lands in West Texas, there would be no energy crisis.

That is the opinion of James B. Zimmerman of Midland, geologist in charge of the state's University Lands, which contain more than 5,000 oil wells and 189 gas wells.

University Lands, stretching over 19 West Texas counties, are managed by The University of Texas System from headquarters here.

In a recent interview, Zimmerman discussed oil and gas development in the U.S. generally and on University Lands particularly.

He is firm in his belief that public lands in the U.S. can "lead the way out of this energy crisis," but he is quick to point out one of the major problems: "The federal government owns most of the lands which contain the best potential oil and gas reserves—and it is having all kinds of troubles even trying to lease the good areas, much less get them drilled and producing."

He is equally firm in his belief that the management of University Lands "illustrates that this energy crisis can be solved by simply doing what we already know how to do—no new fancy methods, no exotic procedures, just fair prices and freedom to drill."

Production of gas from wells on University Lands in 1974 jumped 51 per cent and almost has doubled in the past two years, which means about 500 million cubic feet of gas is produced every day from the lands—an amount, he says, sufficient to supply a population the size of the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

In addition, oil production also is showing a "highly encouraging response" on University Lands, after being "in a decline for several years."

In 1973, oil production fell 7 per cent—but the decline was only .5 per cent in 1974.

"Although oil and gas production continues to decline in the entire United States," Zimmerman reports, "the decline has not only beeen arrested on University Lands, but production is showing a dramatic increase."

He says there also have been corresponding increases in reserves.

Oil production on University Lands now is running about 90,000 barrels a day—which Zimmerman points out would make the lands "the eighth—ranking state in oil production if they were an individual state."

James Zimmerman

He notes that the "largest single geophysical operation in the history of University Lands" is being conducted over several hundred thousand acres, and "at least six months of intensive work" will be required to complete the operation.

The first major oil discovery in the Permian Basin was made on University Lands in 1923, and since that time 1.2 billion barrels of oil have come from the more than 268 fields discovered on the lands.

University Lands presently have more than 5,000 oil wells and 189 gas wells. Last year, an additional 120 wells were drilled, representing a 50 per cent increase over 1973.

Zimmerman explains that more than 5,000 barrels a day of new oil were developed on the lands in 1974 with drilling accounting for most of the increase while "infill drilling" in old fields also increased production "a substantial amount."

"There was one reason for the increase in drilling and production," Zimmerman notes, "and that was the new higher prices."

He believes that if the price for old oil were freed, a "tremendous increase" in drilling in old fields would result—and that oil companies "could afford to drill hundreds of new wells in reservoirs which are already in secondary recovery units if the oil could be sold at market value."

"That action alone," he states, "could easily increase production on University Lands by 20 per cent."

"However," Zimmerman adds, "there is now a heavy cloud hanging over the future of oil and gas production and exploration on University Lands."

"The depletion allowance for major companies has been eliminated by Congress, and this will have the same effect as would a large drop in prices for oil and gas.

"Although some depletion allowance remains in the law for independent oil operators, the upper limit on gas production for any single independent is 12 million cubic feet per day—and that amount of gas in less than what many single wells are producing on University Lands.

"And worse than that, it is in the gas-prone areas that we have been collecting our best lease bonuses."

Zimmerman thinks the industry can live with the depletion cut if prices are freed and Congress does not take any further punitive action. He hastened to add, however, that some emergency legislation coming out of congressional committees "could properly be labeled plans for a Texas recession."

The geologist reports two tertiary recovery projects are being planned for University Lands in reservoirs where water flooding has failed.

"Reserves of oil under University Lands could be increased substantially by tertiary recovery, but not at the frozen old-oil price. The new price would be required.

"Of course, this is true of all producing areas in the United States, not just University Lands."

In discussing noteworthy increases in gas production, Zimmerman believes it "cannot be overemphasized" that high gas prices are "a must."

"All of the gas increases have come from discoveries in the deep formations of the Delaware Basin," he observes, adding that those gas zones lie at depths ranging from 17,000 to 28,000 feet.

"Well costs can easily exceed $2 million and costs of wildcats in the deeper portions of the basin can go much higher," he says. "One dry hole on University Lands costs more than $5 million. It's no game for the faint of heart—and, I might add, it's no game for a government committee."

A few years ago, Zimmerman says, the UT System decided that it had "a good future in the deep gas trend" if the price of gas were to become comparable to the price of oil on a unit-of-energy basis.

"Gas has always been underpriced compared to all other energy sources. It was anticipated that gas prices would have to move up to par with oil. That has now happened.

"Naturally, I am speaking of intrastate prices—not interstate. The government-controlled prices on gas are still much too low when compared to the prices of energy from oil, coal, uranim or any other source."

Activity on University Lands frequently is an indication of the trends in the rest of the U.S, he says, because the lands are composed of large blocks and are handled in such a manner as to encourage rapid leasing, drilling and development.

For example, the Board for Lease of University Lands at its March meeting approved agreements with various companies calling for the drilling of 11 deep wells, the cost of which will run from $1 million to $1.5 million each.

Revenues from the production of oil and gas on University Lands go into the Permanent University Fund, and proceeds are shared by the UT System and Texas A&M University.

FELIX WELMAKER

The House of Carpets was originally located appropriately . . . in a home. When owner Felix Welmaker moved to Midland in 1951, there was not one downtown business location available, so he set up shop in the old Brunson family home at 1501 N. Lamesa Road. This served as home for the House of Carpets for a number of years, prior to moving to their present location. The House of Carpets has become famous, not only in West Texas, but in Florida, California, Alabama, Illinois, New York and many other states, because of the tremendous selection you can find at the House of Carpets, and because of the competitive prices, buyers from out of state have selected the House of Carpets for many large and famous installations including a football stadium in Dallas (you know which one). So when you desire some extra expertise in the selection of your carpets (or draperies and other things), see the House of Carpets . . . the home-owned and operated carpet store that has served the nation, but still makes its home in good old Midland.

Midlander Writes Of Life In Germany

By JEFF WEBB

I write you today as a foreign exchange student in Germany for the American Field Service. I am writing from the city of Nienberge. It's a small village near the industrial city of Munster.

My "father" works in Munster and is a corporate lawyer. After spending seven days in Hamburg at an AFS language camp, I am ready to settle down and try to learn the customs and life of a normal German teenager. I have nine people in my family. The children's ages range from 18 to 10. The eldest three children speak very good English so there is no real communication problem. I am sure I can show my family some good Texas hospitality while I am here. My family has really been nice to me. I feel very much at home here and I wish I could stay longer with them.

The most obvious change from Midland to Germany is the terrain. By living in Midland 16 years, I am very used to mesquite and sand. Here it is quite different. Everywhere you look there are scores and scores of trees. The green fields dotting the countryside provide a spectacular array of colors and scenery. The flowers of Germany are also very pretty. No German home is complete without colorful flowers hanging from a windowsill. Everywhere you look flowers seem to be there. They provide tremendous beauty for all around them. But the terrain is not what makes the country so good, it is the people.

As in every place in the world, there are some unfriendly people, but as a whole I have found the German people very friendly. As an American I have not encountered any prejudice towards me or my country. When people ask me questions about the United States, I try to be as honest and truthful as possible. I try to express the love Americans have towards their country, and I want to show the German people that the United States is still "the land of the free."

I will hope that I can answer all the questions the people ask me and uphold the name of the United States at all times. I do not think this will be a great problem because my family is very helpful at all times.

I have been to German school and the only big difference was that there is one school for boys and one for girls. School starts at 8 a.m. and ends at 1:30 p.m. Do not feel cheated, for they also go to school on Saturday.

The food is quite different. Everything is eaten with bread and butter. It is good, but I would like a nice big Texas steak every once in a while. The music here is all American except for German and British songs. The radio stations are just like those in the United States, but the television is quite different. There are many American shows, but German voices dubbed in. It is quite funny sometimes.

I miss Midland very much and I hope everyone will be the same when I get back . . . friendly, nice and down to earth.

Goodbye from Germany
Jeff Webb

French Fishermen Blockade Harbors

Hundreds of sailboats and other pleasure craft were trapped in resort areas. An international sailing regatta at Deauville was canceled because the yachts could not get past the fishing boats which carried banners saying: "The ocean is being turned into a garbage can."

Raids Smash Huge Numbers Racket

LOS ANGELES (AP) — More than 100 federal agents and police officers have broken up an alleged numbers racket that had an annual take of more than $3.6 million, authorities say.

The raids late Friday capped a six-month investigation under the command of Ralph J. Rampton, acting assistant FBI director. There were no arrests but evidence gathered in the raids will be presented to a grand jury for possible indictments.

Texas State Bar To Seek Judge Parr's Disbarment

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Bar of Texas will seek this week to have suspended Duval County Judge Archer Parr disbarred, its general counsel said Friday.

Davis Grant said State District Court Judge O.P. Carrillo, who ordered Parr's removal as Duval County judge following a federal perjury conviction, has set the disbarment proceeding for Thursday afternoon.

Grant said the disbarment proceeding also is based on Parr's federal court perjury conviction. He said there will be no trial on the disbarment, just a judicial proceeding to show Parr's conviction. Disbarment is automatic upon such a showing, Grant said.

The case originally was set for last December, but Parr's lawyer, Rep. Terry Canales, D-Premont, asked for a legislative continuance. Canales is the author of a legislative resolution that led a special House committee to recommend impeachment of Carrillo.

Grant was asked what would happen if Canales again asked for a legislative continuance because of the House impeachment hearing. He replied, "That will be a case of first impression (never before decided) and I will argue that the impeachment proceeding is not the House in session."

Wineries Elect Woman Executive

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Margaret Shabenian has become the first woman in the history of the 41-year-old Wine Institute to be elected to the board of directors. She is vice president and corporate secretary of Guild Wineries.

She began her career in the wine industry at the Alta Vineyards Co. in Fresno, Calif., in 1947. Alta was acquired by Guild, the big grower-owned cooperative, in 1962.

Survey Shows Doctors Ignore Many Nursing Home Patients

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A nationwide survey shows that many nursing home patients are ignored by doctors, overmedicated and refuse to eat regular meals. Still, a federal official says the results are better than expected.

Dr. Theodore Cooper, assistant secretary for health of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, said, "It's really not as bad as I'd expected when we went in to find out how bad it was."

Cooper was describing to newsmen at an HEW-sponsored seminar Friday the results of the HEW survey, which he said is now ready for printing. Some of Cooper's remarks were in a prepared text to which he referred but did not read.

He said the survey, based on unannounced visits by doctors to 300 nursing homes serving 283,000 patients, showed:

—Physicians tend to concentrate on the preservation of life rather than the "dignity of death" and they "...just dumped their patients into nursing homes and forgot them."

—In some instances, overmedication resulted when physicians failed to discontinue orders no longer needed. "In another case, there was not clinical evidence...to indicate the need for prescribing some potentially dangerous drugs."

—Patients' records were incomplete, mixed up or not signed. "In many cases, attending physicians underreported many impairments such as loss of sight, hearing, and amputations as well as senility or chronic brain syndrome."

—Eighty-nine per cent of the patients had their menus planned for them in writing, but 51,666 refused more than half the meals served them. "Only 27 per cent were offered appropriate substitutes," he said, adding that one out of five nursing homes had more than a 14-hour span between breakfast and dinner.

"I am thoroughly convinced that the quality of care in nursing homes throughout the country would be much higher if physicians had taken a personal interest in the management and care of their patients in these facilities," Cooper said.

"The survey has made it abundantly clear that there is much work ahead for us all," he said, "The greatest problem in our federal regulations is that they fail to achieve what they were designed to accomplish."

He said the department would emphasize programs that increase the quality of nursing home care and that encourage home care for more elderly people.
