According to the American Heart Association, the chain of survival for cardiac arrest has four major links. Two links depend on public education, teaching the general public to access the 911 system promptly and learning CPR.

The third link involves rapid defibrillation. When the heart first stops, there is a 90 percent chance it shock. The only treatment of this rhythm is defibrillation (shocking the heart). Time plays a major factor in restarting the heart. If the shock is applied within one minute of the heart stopping, there is a 90 percent chance of restarting the heart.

"Every minute thereafter, we lose 10 percent chance of restarting the heart," said Meador.

The U.S. survival rate from cardiac arrest is only five percent, largely

The nation's businesses were handed an unwelcome gift during the recent holiday season. A few days bereptitiously slipped into the Federal 1000-page manifesto. Register a vague and ill-conceived prove the injuries occurred on the job.

Equally outrageous is that workers would be able to stay home and receive 90 percent of their salary and benefits, even if they failed to show ward by the Labor Department's Ofas it is shocking. Its price tag is esti-home mated to be more than $75 billion.

Business owners and executives are both angry and indignant. They are worried that hundreds of companies that will be affected by the plan remain n the dark because OSHA's outlandish ideas have not received broad media attention and the deadline for public comments is days away. Equally sobering is that the rules do not have to be approved by a legislative body. It's bureaucrats at the U.S. Department of Labor who get the last

Organizations like the Texas Association of Business and Chambers of Commerce, therefore, are scrambling to spread the bad news before the February 1 deadline for companies to send their comments to OSHA. Hearings are scheduled for Washington, D.C., Portland, Ore., and Chicago, Ill., in February, March and April. We believe it is essential for businesses to have their say and to be heard.

Labor Department Secretary Alexis Herman has already made a partial retreat, retracting one of the proposals, which would have included

Every person counts

Every ten years, the government is supposed to count every one of us. Once the government knows how many people live in the nation, it can figure out the fairest way for them to share in about $185 billion in federal grant money. The numbers are also used to decide everything from how many people should represent states in Congress, to how many state representatives a county has, to where schools, hospitals, and businesses should be built.

The Constitution calls for the national census. The first census was taken in 1790. That year, the census counted 3.9 million men, women, and children. Today, there are about 275 million Americans. If any one of those people doesn't return his or her form, the Census Bureau has to pay someone to go to his home. This is one time when estimating doesn't cut it.

Many people - about one third of our country last time around - don't return the census form that is mailed to them. A lot of people just don't understand why they should bother with it, or don't trust the government to keep the information a secret, especially if they're in the country illegally.

Because some people may have not been counted in previous counts, the urday, with judging of livestock startcensus has become a political football. Some think that the best way to ensure an accurate count is to estimate populations in many cities. Experts don't agree on the need for an estimate, or even how an estimate would be conducted. Estimates can be manipulated for partisan political purposes. The best way to ensure an accurate count is to do our best to make sure every Ameri- judge Angora goats.

Return your family's Census form, and remind your friends to do the same. The government's spending about $170 million on an ad campaign to try to do just that. However, there is something else you can do. You can take home here Sunday night after spenda part-time job with the Census Bureau, and get paid to try to make sure that ing last week in Midland visiting her everyone in your town's counted. The Census Bureau's having a hard time finding the more than half million workers it will need to complete the census. Many of them are hired to visit the homes of people who don't return their forms. The hours can be very flexible, and much of the work's done in April.

If you are interested, you can call the Census Bureau at (888) 325-7733. The pay starts at around eight dollars an hour.

Letters to the Editor

Rehab 2000, our annual telethon held on January 8, was a great success - thanks to many dear friends like those we have in Ozona.

Phone bank coordinator Kay Stewart, Crockett National Bank which provided the phone bank location, and all volunteers who worked that night certainly deserve - and get a special salute from us. We're sure, however, that each of those people would join Rehab in reserving a very special "Thank You" for everyone who made a telethon donation through the local phone bank.

Ozona support throughout the year is deeply appreciated and is something we work hard every day to continue to deserve.

Sincerely, June Bell

Good for the mind and body-square dancing

By Carol Adcock

Fach square dance is the equivalent to walking five miles and is lots more fun. While you are dancing, you must concentrate on the calls so your dancing will be more enjoyable. This takes your mind off all your troubles and problems for a while and puts it the Levis and Lace Club drove to on a very enjoyable entertainment. The fellowship in square dancing is very beneficial for your well-being,

The motto of square dancing is fun and fellowship set to music. You can make new friends in any part of the world when you go there to dance as all square dance calls are done in English everywhere.

Leroy and Carol Adcock from Levis and Lace Square Dance Club journeyed to Del Rio Saturday, Jan. 15, to attend the Road Runners first anniversary dance at the Fagle Room. Nine squares sashayed and twirled to a national caller from Austin. Bill Prichard from Eagle Pass was master of ceremonies

Texans need to eat less, move more for good health

Everything is bigger in Texas, or so the saying goes. Buildings, hair and steaks are certainly bigger. But according to the Journal of the American Medical Association, Texans are getting bigger, too. The percentage of obese Texans has increased by 56 percent since 1991.

Extension nutritionist Jenna Anding isn't surprised. She says adults are consuming an estimated 230 calories more today than they were 20 years ago. While food intake has steadily increased, exercise has not. An estimated 60 percent of American adults are not exercising.

Anding says there are several ways that consumers can eat less. First, eat from a plate instead of a bag or a box. Those hand-fulls of chips or cookies tend to add up fast. She also says to read food labels. Fat free doesn't mean calorie free. Finally, sit down and enjoy your meals. Anding says eating in front of the TV can result in overeating.

She says individuals who don't like traditional forms of exercise can still fit in regular physical activity if they are willing to be creative. For example, take time from your lunch break for a brisk walk. Try scrubbing the floors by hand or cleaning out your kitchen cabinets. Anding says the bottom line is to get off the sofa and move.

The Houston area dancers presented a skit called "Old McDonald had a Farm" for all to enjoy. The dance was held in the gym of a Catholic school, and there was a wonderful wooden floor to dance on.

Wild On the Prairie

By Burr Williams

On Christmas Counts sponsored by the National Audobon Society, I go to the field before daybreak. Three of the regional Counts feature Sandhill Cranes every year. I go to their night roosts and wait for daybreak. Long winter nights test the cranes as they stand in chilled water to their knees, a protection from coyotes. Nervous lonely supplications for the night to end can be heard as I find a watching post hidden from their alert sentinel eyes. I settle in, bundled up and warm.

Sometimes fog rises thick from the water. The emptiness of the plains is magnified by fog. I am almost adrift, as if walking in space, tethered only by memory. The cranes talk querulously as daybreak oozes through the gray-

On one such foggy morning in the past snow began materializing as if from the heart of the cloud. The fog cleared, sifted from the sky by the snow, but visibility hardly increased. My outpost became blanketed by what my mind imagined were the soft down feathers of cranes as they fell silent for three or four minutes. Then I heard a determined splashing, a squawk, and a clamour as 10,000 cranes struggled to seek airborne safety from the Trickster personifiedóa coyote with long antelope legs, soundlessly penetrating the cranes' watery defenses until its final successful lunge.

I heard the coyote splashing to shore as cranes rose into the snow's silence. After long moments of stillness I rose and meandered along the shore of the playa, where I found silver-gray feathers spotted by still liquid blood, its redness the only brightness of the day. The snow lost its softness, became tiny cylindrical pellets, and wind began to cut through my winter clothing, glazing my cheeks with cold.

I have a garden of drought-adapted plants, both exotic and native. In the winter, I prune to shape the direction of growth and to influence the character of the developing habitat. My work is often interrupted by the bugling clarion of cranes circling high, drawing me away to search the limitless sky. If I am lucky the cranes are low enough to be seen. Frequently though, their voices are the only evidence of their presence, resounding like angels, purity with-

Their trumpeting speaks of the centuries. Archaic Indians, the Folsom culture, mammoths and dire wolves all heard the cranes. In migration, cranes fly as high as 13,000 feet and travel at night. Winter foragers soar purely for pleasure on clear warm afternoons there is no other explanation. Hearing them, the call of wanderlust infiltrates my being: the cranes nest as far north as Canadian potholes and Arctic tundra. If I could only join their flight...if I only could! Resting places of migrating cranes are far apart, like the human outposts of my homeland.

Kurooo, kurooo, kurooo. Cranes demonstrate an intelligent curiosity. When I am engaged in activities ouside of the work-day norm (chasing Longspurs and Horned Larks in Alkali Sacaton grass, for example), cranes will circle and fly low. The cranes' analytical watchfulness draws upon extensive memory. Their vision is as far-reaching as their voices, encompassing two miles or more.

Long strings of cranes returning at sunset to roost sites in playa lakes come in rhythmic waves, continuing until the final escape of the winter sun's gentle warmth and light. It seems that each crane calls in turn, their music undulating the length of the curved flightline, a chant as holy and sonorous as those of medieval monks. Winter cranes travel miles to glean grain from the fields, sometimes alighting in pastures to gently herd mice and rats from tussocks of bunchgrass. Their aerial momentum is regal: unlabored, dignified, a stately 30 miles per hour. On the ground, their walk is graceful and unhur-

A Sandhill Crane's blue-gray color fades into the gray-gold of the prairie. At times I have been a half mile from a hundred cranes feeding on the ground, unaware of their presence until one brags of catching a juicy cottonrat, or of finding a tasty root or plump grubworm pupae. In twilight they become invisible as they melt into shallow water. At midday the blue sky swallows a flight. Cranes have the power of the anti-mirage to remain invisible within visual range.

Sandhill Cranes play. A well-fed flock soars for an afternoon's entertainment, twisting, banking, diving, and sideslipping. At such times their antics appear to be a contest: one or two perform a maneuver, then others follow suit. The lead cranes are overtaken by others, the lead exchanged over and over. Once I have followed a lone crane who never flew but kept ahead of me, occasionally stopping as if to say Hurry up! What is keeping you? I watched one tossing a Kleenex up in the air, chasing it as the breeze caught it, catching it again, and bowing as if proud of its prowess.

The mating dance of cranes is famous -- leaping gyrations and mirthful gravity-defying bounces. At times they bound over each other. Rehearsal often occurs on wintering grounds occurs. Do they share new steps? New rhythms? Do they have dance contests? The dance is accompanied by the din of other cranes, which can stop without reason can, and then resuming like the chatter of a human gathering.

Like the sounds of Sandhill Cranes, the song of the Cassin's Sparrow is one of the two most archetypal melodies of the Llano Estacado. Both stir powerful emotion in this native-born plainsman. Two dominant emotional reactions to the prairie are personified: the sparrow's subtle familiarity which invites one to examine life more closely, and the crane's far-seeing, far-traveling perspective. The contrast of these diametrically opposed viewpoints creates a single unified paradigm.

Unlike the haunting call of the crane, the Cassin's Sparrow sings a different song of the I lano. In the soft light of first dawn, as nighttime chill clutches most strongly, an ascending quavering song urges the sun upwards.
