Fighting someone else's 'good idea' for our land

My family and I closed a chapter in our lives when we sold the last piece of our ranch just outside of Midland. My grandchildren were the sixth generation to have the privilege of taking care of that piece of the world. We are still ranching, but we have moved to McCulloch County, leaving behind good memories of the ranch and some bitter memories of facing a cadre of entities that had ideas how our land should be used.

For over a decade, we stood against pipeline companies wanting to run their easements across our property on routes that were to their benefit and not ours.

We felt that we had to stand with the city of Midland when the city leaders annexed parts of our ranch for the "greater good," only to have our decision to sell parcels of the ranch blocked by the city and finally being able to sell at a third of the value.

CATTLEMAN'S COLUMN

We endured a merry-go-round of how that annexed land was zoned - from agriculture to light industrial to residential and back to agricultural because that land is at the end of the runway for a proposed spaceport.

We were told that if we fought the city too vocally on these zoning changes, in which we had no say, we would become known as greedy ranchers trying to harm the future of Midland. Any memories of the generations of support my family had given to the city and the area would be tainted or forgotten.

In a recent news article about the Texas Supreme Court again hearing the case of Denbury Green Pipeline-Texas LLC against rice farmers and ranchers James E. Holland and David C. Holland, the word "extortionist" was applied to ranchers who oppose the eminent domain powers of common carriers and attempt to stand up for what's best for their land and their families.

It is a bitter and disheartening thing to hear your community of property owners being characterized as greedy, extortionist, short-sighted and unwilling to support the greater good, especially when the taxes paid by landowners go to fund many more public services than will ever be used on a ranch.

I recently testified in Austin about our family's experience with city annexation on behalf of Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association (TS-CRA). As part of the TSCRA Eminent Domain and Surface Damage Working Group, which is overseen by the Property Rights and Tax Committee, I was able to tell our story to the Texas House Land and Resource Management Committee.

TSCRA leaders and members understand that open ranchland is not just a vacant commodity waiting around to be the resource on which someone else gets to overlay their "greater good" ideas.

Back to Work

During my first term, I put over 75,000 miles on my car crisscrossing the district, hosted over 400 public meetings, and helped over 1,000 individual constituents beat the federal bureaucracy. It's been a busy two years, but I'm just getting started.

Our nation is experiencing new challenges every day with an evolving economy, increasing national threats, and a federal bureaucracy riddled with inefficiencies. There's never been a more important time to continue our hard work throughout Texas and in Washington, DC. I'm pleased to report that as soon as you reelected me, my staff and I hit the ground running.

Just days after the election, I spent Veterans Day with the children at Leon Valley Elementary School, the veterans at American Legion Post 26 in Uvalde, and by hosting a veterans' appreciation event at Acadiana Café in San Antonio to raise awareness of veterans issues and increase understanding with the civilian community. During the reception, local veterans shared intimate stories of their military service with the crowd and we discussed ways that we could better accommodate our veteran families, as a community.

This week, I've been back to work on National Security initiatives and strengthening our nation's cyber infrastructure. For example, on Tuesday, I voted to extend sanctions for Iran for an additional ten years before the existing sanctions end in December. Why on Earth would we let the sanctions expire when there is no evidence that Iran has held up its end of the deal?

For the past 20 years, these sanctions have been a powerful tool in decelerating the rogue regime's development of a nuclear program. Despite the sanctions, Iran has continued testing ballistic missiles in violation of UN Security Council resolutions. The most recent test occurred this past July, and before that, two medium-range ballistic missiles were tested in March. There must be consequences when hostile nations develop illicit nuclear programs, and Iran should be no different. Allowing the sanctions to expire would only reward their insolence and send a message that the United States will no longer oppose the destructive role of Iran in the Middle East. The bill also gives Congress, not the Executive Branch, the final say on when we lift sanctions.

HURDON THE HILL

On Wednesday, I hosted an IT Subcommittee Hearing to explore cyber security issues affecting federal agencies in the wake of the OPM breach. I learned that while many agencies have made significant improvements in their compliance federal information security regulations, there is still a long way to go. This conversation starts with agency CIO's. We must continue to ensure that our agency Chief Information Officers have the authorities necessary to keep their agencies safe, because we can't hold them accountable if we don't give them the tools they need to get the job done. My bill, the Modernizing Government Technology Act does just that. This is not a problem that can be solved overnight, but I'll continue fighting to implement 21st Century solutions that protect our government data, your privacy, and our national security priority.

The following day, I introduced the American Law Enforcement Heroes Act in the House of Representatives, alongside companion legislation introduced by Senator Cornyn, which incentivizes local and State law enforcement agencies to hire military veterans with existing federal funding. The initiative is a no-brainer and allows us to better serve our nation's veterans by providing meaningful jobs that allow them to continue their service to the community.

It's good to be back to work, but there's a lot more to do. I'm optimistic about the possibilities that a new legislative session brings and for the opportunity to make sure the voices of the people I represent are heard in Washington. And remember, I'm just getting started.

Bullish

IT'S THE PITTS

LEE PITTS

For years purebred bull breeders didn't get paid what they deserved for making such a big investment in better genetics, so I'm glad to see them finally getting paid handsomely for their better bulls. Having said that, the rise in price has made it difficult on cheapskates like my friend Patch who never spent more than a $1,550 on a bull before in his life. Despite being one of the richest guys in the county he's a sub-optimal spender who wears big patches on his drugstore pants. Hence the nickname.

Patch is tighter than the wires on a brand new fence, looks in vending machines for any change left behind and worships the almighty dollar. In his 66 years of life he has never been known to utter the words, "Keep the change."

Most ranchers I know study all the bull sale catalogs and step up when it comes to buying better bulls because they know it will pay off when it comes time to sell their calves. Not to mention the added bonus of building a front pasture kind of cow herd. Granted, the typical wife of a rancher may be driving a 15 year old Yugo but the rancher will not hesitate to spend $7,000 for a bull.

Not so Patch. For 35 years he has called me before every bull sale season and asked me to buy a couple bulls for him but to keep the price under $1,500 each. I didn't mind buying bulls for him if he would just keep it a secret but no, every time his calves hit the sale ring he'd stand up, interrupt the auctioneer and say, "These calves were all sired by bulls selected by Lee Pitts." And then the sorriest looking calves you ever saw would sell fifteen bucks behind the market toppers.

Yes sir, if you wanted to crash the market then Lee Pitts was your guy. He never mentioned his cheap budget for bulls or that his wallet was rusted shut. One year I went fifty bucks over my limit on a better type of bull and you should have heard Patch cry.

Needles to say, it has become increasingly difficult to fill Patch's bull order and when he called last time the conversation went like this.

"Hey Pitts, I need three bulls this year so what's it gonna cost me?"

"Well, I don't know if you've been paying attention but good bull sales are averaging $5,000 to $7,000 and I even heard of one sale that averaged over $15,000."

The phone went dead for awhile before Patch said in a weak voice, "Did you say $15,000?" he gurgled. "That must be on just a few head."

"Nope, I'm talking sales of four and five hundred bulls averaging $5,000 to $15,000!"

"So you're saying you can't find me three registered bulls for $1,500 apiece plus free delivery?"

"Nope. That would be harder to do than finding the elbows on a blowfly. I could not do that even if I bought them out of the slaughter run at the sales yard. Good bulls cost more. I heard of one ranch manager buying 15 head and averaging $10,000 apiece. Another bull sold for a valuation of a million bucks!"

You should have heard the wailing on the other end of the line. "That's insane," whimpered Patch. "I bet the livestock insurance salesmen are living high."

"Oh come on Patch, spend some of all that money you've stockpiled. You might as well, after all, you can't take it with you."

"No, but I can go to the cemetery in a much better car."

"Where you're going Patch and the kind of life you've led it wouldn't do you any good if you could take it with you because it's just gonna burn up anyway."

"Lee, if I bought a bull for $5,000 he'd have to sleep in the house where I could keep tabs on him. I'd have to serve his feed off the fine China and buy one of those $100,000 live-in trailers like Trevor Brazile's got so I could take the bull with us when we went on vacation."

Bill filers jump to early start as legislative session nears

STATE CAPITAL HIGHLIGHTS By Ed Sterling | Texas Press Association

AUSTIN — Just a few of Texas' 31 Senate members and 150 House members filed a total of 523 pieces of legislation on Nov. 14, the first day lawmakers could submit legislation for the coming session.

The 85th regular session of the Texas Legislature is scheduled to convene on the second Tuesday in January, that is, Jan. 10, at noon. Final adjournment — 140 days later — is set for the last Monday in May, that is, May 29.

Now, back to those bills filed on Nov. 14. Not that it's a competition, but Rep. Terry Canales, D-Edinburg, filed 20 bills, the highest total of any House member. Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, was the top 1st-day filer among senators and all legislators with 42 bills and one joint resolution. Zaffirini also co-authored three bills she filed jointly with Sen. José Menéndez, D-San Antonio.

The subject matter of early-filed bills is naturally wide-ranging. Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, Zaffirini and others filed bills regulating the use of a handheld communications device while driving. Craddick and others have filed such legislation in previous sessions. Reps. Eddie Lucio III, D-Brownsville, and "Mando" Martinez, D-Weslaco, filed bills to establish a public law school in the Rio Grande Valley. Rep. Harold Dutton, D-Houston, filed a bill to abolish the death penalty.

Senate Finance Committee Chair Jane Nelson, R-Flower Mound, filed a bill to prohibit the temporary closure of segments of the state highway system on days that scheduled events are being held in a municipality. Sen. Don Huffines, R-Dallas, filed a bill to set term limits for elected officers of political subdivisions. Sen. Sylvia Garcia, D-

Houston, filed a bill to require a training course on human trafficking for commercial driver's license applicants.

During a typical session, legislators will file between 7,000 and 10,000 pieces of legislation. Of those, perhaps 20 percent will survive the process and become new laws, amend or repeal current laws or appear on a statewide ballot as proposed constitutional amendments.

PATRICK LISTS PRIORITIES

Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick, who presides over the Texas Senate, on Nov. 14 released a list of his top 10 legislative priorities for the 85th regular session of the Legislature.

Patrick's priorities including his comments on each:

1. 2017 Budget Proposal: "A budget estimate for fiscal years 2018-19 is not yet available, but we will pass a balanced budget that will strengthen the Texas economy and assure that it retains its global competitiveness."

2. Property Tax Reform: "Texans pay the sixth-highest property taxes in the nation and the high rates are taxing people out of their homes and hampering business growth. This must change."

Good grief! Thirty-two days until Christmas and I haven't even thought about buying any gifts. This is just a reminder that you may need to get busy shopping if you are going to buy any gifts. Remember the cool stores right here in town that have a really good selection of about anything you might want. Cut down on the stress of the traffic in San Angelo and look around right here in town for your selections. These stores are working tirelessly to offer you selections of the latest styles. Remember the money you spend here supports our pretty town. Give these guys a chance!

Be sure to support our Helping Hands at their arts and crafts shown on Dec. 8. There will be members selling tickets for the quilt made by our Hands in Service Quilters. Buy some tickets and support their effort in taking care of our elderly and shut-ins. Thanks in advance.

There will be not be a December Bingo Social due to the busy schedule for Christmas.

Don't forget this sit-down exercise on Tuesdays at 10:30 a.m. Nikki Bishop is leading this exercise. She is the Wesley Nurse at the Methodist church. Such a sweet girl, and she will take your blood pressure and keep a record of your progress.

I am also going to start crafts again on Monday afternoon at 3 p.m. We will be learning to make mesh wreaths. You will need to bring a wire base ring and a roll of mesh in the size and color you want and pipe cleaners in a close color. I have been told that the Dollar Store has some of this or you can get someone to get what you want in Angelo. Come on out and learn how to do those beautiful mesh wreaths yourself you see on Pinterest.

I have had some request for the balance exercise on Thursday at 9:30 a.m. It is not a very hard exercise, but will help strengthen your muscles for the balance we all need to keep us from those dreaded falls. Isn't a little discomfort in your muscles better than the disablement of a broken hip? Just saying.

Call Lisa Valencia with Area Agency on Aging for help on age related problems at (325) 223-5704. Corrina Sturgeon with Esperanza and Jorge Salizon are on the insurance information. The number is (325) 949-6220. You can call Mary Landa with 2-1-1 Texas. If you need information on any of things that concern us older generation, dial 2-1-1 and you will get a message asking you to choose English or Spanish - choose one of these and then choose option 1. BOARD: CCCSD has sent $217 million to the state since 1999

ROBIN HOOD FUNDING

At a recent regional superintendent's meeting, Superintendent Raul Chavarria said the hot topic is state funding for schools, especially with Houston ISD being made a Chapter 41, "property-rich," school district this year.

During the Nov. 8 General Election, a strong majority of voters within the Houston Independent School District opposed a measure to send $165 million in local property taxes to poorer school districts — the first vote of its kind in the history of the current school finance system. Almost 63 percent voted against the proposition by the end of the night, according to an article in the Texas Tribune.

The mayor and many HISD trustees urged voters to reject the measure and not hand over the tax money, the Tribune article stated.

Rejecting the measure paves the way for the state to potentially take the money from HISD in a different way. Commissioner Mike Morath sent a letter to HISD officials based on initial results notifying them that TEA might move commercial properties from its tax rolls to the tax rolls of another district.

School trustees have said they hope the Legislature will exempt them from having to pay, the Tribune article stated.

"Now we hope we have some help. We've been wanting someone like them (Houston ISD) to fight this," Childress said.

Chavarria told the board they would be surprised how many of Crockett County taxpayers in the public do not know how much of the district's budget is sent every year to the state.

In the three years that Chavarria has been superintendent, CCCSD has sent back to the state almost $40 million of Crockett County taxpayer money.

"On the average we send 64 percent of our money to 'Robin Hood' each year," Chavarria said.

The Robin Hood program started out small, with only 34 school districts paying up — mostly smaller rural ones near big industrial plants or other major tax-generating properties. But as property values have skyrocketed across the state, an increasing number of school districts have hit the maximum level of wealth generation set in state law. Most of them are required to send money to the state because they raise more tax revenue than they are allowed to keep. Of the state's 1,207 school districts and charters, 257 are expected to make recapture payments this school year. That is up from 142 districts that made recapture payments in 2006, according to a report from the Texas Tribune.

Recapture payments now make up a sizable chunk of what the state spends on public education, with more than $2 billion in payments expected in 2017, the Texas Tribune reported.

Chavarria said if the state trend continues, CCCSD will have sent a quarter of a billion dollars in two years to the state.

The board approved a resolution to the State Legislature that states that the State of Texas make a strong commitment to support public education by equalizing the states contribution to public school funding to that of the local districts. This equalization must be done by reworking Chapter 41 Recapture system and allow school districts to keep more of locally raised funds to educate students, the resolution stated.

The state's contribution per student to public education is $3,887, which is far less than the local contribution of $5,209, yet the state demands more control of how funds are collected and spent, the resolution stated.

The district has sent nearly $217 million to the state since 1999, and that CCCSD currently ranks as the 26th largest "donor" out of the Chapter 41 school district in Texas, the resolution stated.

"CCCSD is forced to increase our taxes if we plan to continue a high level of education, yet lose more control of how we are to spend our funds," the resolution stated.

"Our goal is to keep our taxes low. That's our challenge," Chavarria said. "I think our voice in the State of Texas should be right up there with the bigger districts."

The resolution stated that the district is also opposed to a voucher system to fund private or charter schools.

Lieutenant Governor Dan Patrick is proposing a bill to create vouchers to allow public money to be spent by parents to send their children to private schools, the resolution stated.

The closest private or charter school to Ozona is in San Angelo. That means that the state would be taking even more money from CCCSD to fund students in other communities, the resolution stated.

Also, there is a lack of transparency on the part of charter and private schools. These schools can spend money without the accountability ratings, such as the Public School Rating System or Financial Integrity Rating holding public schools financially accountable, the resolution stated.

SPECIAL EDUCATION TEACHERS

Allison McGuire, speech therapist for the district, spoke to the board about offering a stipend for special education teachers due to the district currently being short two teachers.

McGuire asked the board to "do everything you can to recruit special education teachers and strongly consider a stipend to them."

"I feel like some incentive could help," McGuire said. "Our students definitely deserve it."

McGuire also gave credit to OMS and OES Principal Tammy McWilliams for handling the shortage.

Childress thanked McGuire for her concern.

THE BOARD ALSO:

- Approved a budget amendment of $6,000 to be taken out of fund balance to pay for moving the new federal programs building at Ozona Elementary School.

- Approved innovative courses at Ozona High School. This will allow the district to offer classes for special needs students. Chavarria said the district is already offering many of the classes.

- Approved the Superintendent Evaluation Form for 2016-2017.

- Mentioned the $500 retention stipend for all teachers and staff to be distributed this month.

"We want to thank the teachers and staff by that retention stipend. It's a show of faith in our teachers and staff from our school board," Chavarria said.

- Met in executive/closed session for 45 minutes on personnel. The board took no action when they reconvened in open session.

FUTURE MEETINGS

A board workshop "Team of Eight Training" will be held at 6 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 29, at the Administration Building. This is a requirement the board has to do every year.

The next regular board meeting will be 6:30 p.m. Dec. 14 at the Administration Building.
