City To Draft New Ordinance To Impose Fines On Dilapidated Buildings

Owners of dilapidated buildings in Tahoka will face stiff fines of up to $1000 a day if they do not comply with requests to repair or tear down buildings designated hazardous by the city fire marshal and health department, according to Jim Solomon, Mayor of Tahoka.

City Council members met Monday night to discuss the problem of dilapidated buildings in Tahoka, and voted unanimously to instruct the . city's lawyer to restructure the city's dilapidated building ordinance to impose a fine of up to $1,000 per day if certain requirements are not met within a designated time limit.

impose fines to get the owners of these buildings to work with the City," said Solomon. "Everybody wants us (the city) to tear down these old buildings, but nobody's come up with an idea about how to pay for it," he added.

If owners do not comply, the fines collected by the city will be used to help defray the cost of having the buildings torn down, according to the mayor. City Council members concurred with the plan, noting however that the cost of the city tearing down dilapidated buildings would be an expensive undertaking.

"It comes to a point, however, when the public interest and safety supersedes the cost," said Council member Carl Reynolds. "Taxpayers don't want us to use their money to tear down buildings, but when it becomes a safety hazard, at some point that factor must outweigh the cost," he added.

"These fines that would be imposed would take care of the owner's "We would prefer not to have to responsibility to the city," said Solomon. "We're not trying to make money on this," he explained.

> City Manager Barry Pittman said there are several buildings which the City plans to target, and owners of these buildings will be contacted and given an opportunity to attend a public hearing and comply with city re> quirements before a fine is imposed. In other business, council mem bers discussed the need for a chipper to handle brush and tree limbs, which are not accepted at the county waste collection station. The group agreed to approach county commissioners about sharing the cost of the chipper, but no action was taken.

Council members gave the city manager approval to negotiate a contract with Wayne Jeffcoat to maintain the grounds at the cemetery. Tahoka Police Chief Jerry Webster reported on the police department activities for the month of June, noting that 220 calls were received, 11 arrests made, eight tickets issued, 16 warning citations issued, and one burglary reported.

After a brief budget discussion, the meeting adjourned at 8:45 p.m. All council members, city manager and mayor were present, and Juanell Jones, Bill Sawyer and Jerry

A budget meeting was tentatively set for Monday, July 27, at which time council members will discuss the budget for the next fiscal year.

Lynn County Producers Recovering From Severe Weather Hardships

This year producers in the county have had an unusually hard time in establishing a crop for 1992. The rain needed to allow all producers to complete the planting process also brought severe wind, hail, and very cool temperatures as well as excess

This weather caused total crop losses as well as reduction of the plant population due to disease. Many producers replanted to cotton while other producers chose to plant a second crop of grain sorghum, peas, sunflowers, or soybeans.

The final date producers were required to replant cotton and stay eligible for program benefits in Lynn County was June 10. The next day was the first day producers were permitted to report failed cotton acre-

It's been so hot — let's just all shuck our clothes and run around naked, and perhaps even take a helicopter ride "au naturale" with a bunch of other unclothed people who are compete strangers. That's what they're going to do at the Live Oak Nudist Resort this weekend near Houston.

We received in the mail a news release about Nude Recreation Week 1992 which said "hundreds of nudists from the Houston area and all around the state will be congregating at Live Oak Nudist Resort for a week-long celebration of nude recreation to which the public is invited.

They will even have free helicopter rides which will provide bare (and clothed) guests with an aerial tour of the resort. Yech!

That sounds like a barrel of fun, doesn't it? The news release says that the purpose of Nude Recreation Week is "to heighten public awareness of nude recreation opportunities and to educate the community on social

Oh. It's educational. That's different. I thought it was just a bunch of weird people with extremely small brains who are extremely proud of their bodies. Pardon me.

The event is co-sponsored by the American Sunbathing Association (sounds logical) and The Naturist Society which together represent the 50,000 card-carrying nudists in North America. I wonder where they carry their all day, eating breakfast, lunch and supper in the buff, playing volleyball and other recreational activities. I can't think of anything that would make me lose my appetite quicker than to sit across from some naked stranger (or worse, someone I knew) and try to eat a meal. Kind of staggers the mind, doesn't it?

I think I'll just keep my membership here at T-Bar Country Club, where folks may act a little strange sometimes, but hey, at least we keep our clothes on. You got to give us credit for that.

Some of you, I'm sure, are wondering just exactly where this nudist resort is located. Well, I'll tell you - but first, you've got to come by the News Office and tell me why you want to know, and when you're going. I'll loan you my camera - sometimes we get really desperate for pictures for the pa-

For those of you thinking, Hey. wait a minute, this is a family newspaper, let me remind you that, yes indeed, we have run nude pictures before. A few years back, someone sent us a group picture of some native workers somewhere in Africa who obviously did not believe in hampering their movements with clothes. These were construction workers, mind you, wielding hammers and other tools which can easily do bodily harm if their aim is off just a little. But, they all had on tool belts, with tools hanging in strategic places, and the picture was actually pretty dark, and we were desperate for a picture, and so we ran it.

You missed it, didn't you? You should have paid attention, and read your Lynn County News more closely. You just never know what we may do.

Woodard, County Executive Director of the Lynn County ASCS office. He also stated, "Lynn County farmers have been very understanding as the staff has tried to help them hurry as they certified and reported failed acreage. There was also a signup going on at the same time for CRP. We have put all other activities on hold allowing all employees to help in this process. We understood the need for farmers to get back in the fields as soon as possible to replant."

As of this date, 433 farms have been certified with over 75,000 acres of cotton being failed. Most of this acreage will be replanted to a second

The county had been expected to plant 240,000 acres of cotton. Most of this acreage has been planted once. Additional failed acreages will continue to be reported as the fields dry up allowing producers to plow the Producers are required to certify the acreage of cotton on the farm and report the number of acres that have failed before replanting to another crop. About a third of the county has completed this process at the local ASCS office.

All producers will need to call for an appointment to certify the acreage of crops planted as well as acreage need for set aside by July 15. This will include the acreage replanted to grain sorghum or other crops following the failed cotton.

Measurement service is offered by the local ASCS office for operators that need help before certification. The final date to request measurement service is also July 15. Operators are encouraged to call to set an appointment to certify or request measurement service as soon

There is less time than normal due to the time it has taken to establish the crops. It is very important that operators not miss this date.

Honor attendants were Joyce Tatum, mother of the bride, and Steve Vierra of Lubbock. Other attendants were Melinda Gunn and Mindy Dalby, sisters of the bride, both of Post, Phyllis Beckner of Lubbock, and Rhonda Wearden of Dumas, sister of the groom. Letter To Tahoka Citizens

Citizens of Tahoka:

I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude for all of the support you have given me in the last few months. My term as Masked Rider has been a success so far, primarily because of the donations by Tahoka citizens. As a life-long Tahoka resident, I have always know how generous and supportive the fine people of this community can be. The many miles I have traveled this summer have made me appreciate your generosity more than ever. I traveled over 1,800 miles over the recent holiday weekend and still did not come across any supporters as strong as those in Tahoka. Once again, thanks to the many people who support Texas Tech and its traditions. Special thanks to the Tahoka Red Raider Cub for donating money toward the Masked Rider Endowment Fund. This gift will be recognized by a permanent plaque to be displayed in a special room in the Texas Tech University Center. Donations like yours help insure that one of Tech's most recognized symbols will continue to lead the Red Raider into the future.

Sincerely, Jason Spence 1992-93 Texas Tech Masked Rider

From the days of yesteryear ...

Happy Birthday!

ALTHOUGH I never cared for Chinese food, and my wife and one of our daughters really detests it, a lot of people must really like it, since there are quite a few Chinese restaurants around (not in Tahoka, though). Our other daughter says she likes Chinese food, and a guy out at New Home told me the other day he likes Chinese food better than anything else a person can eat.

Recently I made about my third visit ever to a Chinese restaurant, accompanying Other Daughter because she can't find that many people to go eat Chinese food with her. I'll admit that for most of my life, like the other two females in our family, I have made noises like "Yuk" and "Gag" when someone mentions Chinese food. So when I suggested we go eat Chinese food, Other Daughter said, "Okay. You can go with me if you promise not to make a scene and gripe too much and embarrass me."

I told her I would try not to barf on the table.

Before we went she explained that there are different styles or flavors of Chinese food, like Hunan, Szechaun, Mongolian and Mandarin (my daddy used to play one of those 8-stringed contraptions). She also said there would be vegetables and meats of all kinds, some cooked and some raw. She said there would be little pieces of meat hidden cleverly in balls of batter, and mentioned that these would include things like pork, beef, chicken, shrimp and

"Little pieces of duck?" I cried. "That probably won't be too bad if they serve it with quackers." She almost didn't take me with her.

Anyway, where we went there was a buffet so you could see what you were getting, even if you still didn't recognize it. And I'll have to admit that some of the stuff tasted good, although there were a few things I tried which were pretty strange, like what appeared to be beans off a bean tree, and tiny slabs of plastic.

It had been at least 10 years since I tried Chinese food. I may try it again before another decade passes.

Incidentally, the menu included some stuff about Chinese astrology, explaining that if you were born in certain years, this would be the Year of the Tiger or the Year of the Dog or whatever. I hope this was not the Year of the Dog. because I still couldn't identify some of the stuff I ate.

As I sat in your lap watching your hands weave in and out of the yarn I was trying to crochet. Gracefully with my hand on yours you taught me how to stir meal to make corn bread. In your lap you taught me how to sew pot holders. You were always so willing to teach me everything, and I was always so desperate to learn. The day you passed away was the saddest day for everyone including me. I have cherished your memories ever since. The only thing I can do now is to pass your memories down to my children and grandchildren. Everyone will cherish your memories in our hearts forever and always. All through our lives they will be in our hearts to stay.

POST-SURGICAL DEPRESSION A few days, or even weeks, after an operation many patients encounter depression. Many drugs administered during and after surgery can trigger depression as a side effect. Also facing your own mortality, and grappling with a feeling of helplessness and weakness, loss of a body part of organ, can be depressing. Unprovoked crying or anger are common. The depressed feelings usually recede and disappear with recovery. Your doctor has medications to help combat depression.

State Africanized Bee Effort Granted Emergency Funds

A new trap line between Houston and Austin will be the first visible sign of a $182,000 emergency grant to monitor Africanized honey bee movement in Texas.

The funds, authorized by Gov. Ann Richards, will be used in the regulatory effort of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station and the educational program of the Texas Agriculture Extension Service.

The two agencies have led the state's Africanized honey bee effort since the insect began migrating from Mexico into South Texas in the fall of "These funds will keep the program going through the end of 1992," said Dr. Fowden Maxwell, head of the department of entomology at Texas A&M University and chairman of the Texas Africanized Honey Bee Task Force. "In January, we will request additional funds from the Legislature."

The Africanized honey bee effort, including a monitoring trap line, a certification program to allow commercial bee movement from quaran-. tined areas, a bee identification lab and a public education campaign, was facing an August shutdown if additional funds were not found, Maxwell said. One bee inspector position already had been eliminated.

Maxwell said the new trap line will be installed along U.S. Highway 290 from Austin to Houston within six weeks to monitor the bee's continued northward advance.

"Knowing where the bees are is important; it provides a focus for our regulatory and educational endeavors," Maxwell said

He said that as Africanized bee populations build, the state effort has shifted away from a short-term, immediate response to the first swarms of bees entering Texas.

"We aren't going to stop this bee from moving through the state and never had any expectation this was possible," Maxwell said.

Now the state effort has focused on the longer-term goals of helping the general public learn to live with the bee and helping commercial beekeepers maintain their hives of non-

Africanized bees through an inspection and certification program. Twenty-seven counties in South Texas where the bee has been found are under quarantine, which prohibits movement of commercial hives out of the zone without state certifi-

The Experiment Station will use $141,500 to maintain current staff. Additional part-time, temporary positions will be filled as necessary to handle periods of heavy bee activity. Money also will be used to continue operation of the Honey Bee Identification Lab on the Texas A&M cam-

The lab analyzes samples from stinging cases, from traps on monitoring lines, from beekeepers who want their bee hives certified in order to move out of an Africanized beeinfested area, and from citizens who find nests in various places. The lab has been processing nearly 70 samples per month.

The Extension Service will receive $40,500 to continue its public information campaign with printed and video materials in English and Spanish. Maxwell said the Extension Service also hopes to devise a model city-county plan that will help local governments prepare a coordinated response to the Africanized honey bees' arrival. Maxwell said it is of great importance that local governments work out in advance who is going to answer requests from citizens for help in removing bees from their homes and yards.

Maxwell said Africanized honey bees, which have been found in San Antonio and Corpus Christi, are expected to reach Austin this fall and Houston by next spring.

"We've had two years of excellent weather for the spread of the bees- a lot of rain that provides the flowers and water bees need," he said. "Now if we get a dry year, a city will become an oasis for the Africanized honey bee. When everything dries up in the country, people in the cities continue to water their plants. This makes the educational work we need to do with urban populations all the more important."

Isotope Study Will Help Identify Drought-Tolerant Cotton

Texas A&M University researchers hope to beat the volatile Texas weather by using a new technology to find and develop cottons that survive drought and still produce more and better lint.

Dr. Tom Gerik, a professor at the Blackland Research Center in Temple, a part of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, said a technique called carbon isotope discrimination may help find such strains of cotton.

The technique determines the ratio of two carbon isotopes in plant leaves: carbon-12, which is the most common carbon isotope in the atmosphere and used most in photosynthesis, and carbon-13.

Plants with higher carbon-13-tocarbon-12 ratios, when subject to water stress, have been found to be more efficient in their water use, Gerik said. Some plants with higher ratios also photosynthesize better when water is ample, he added.

By calculating the ratio of these isotopes and knowing water stress history of plants, Gerik said, his team hopes to identify plants with good drought tolerance and good photosynthesis capacity at a very early growth stage. Those plants then can be selected and used in breeding pro-

Plant breeders have successfully used carbon isotope discrimination for improved breeding of wheat, beans and other crops. Because cotton's photosynthetic process is similar to that of those crops, Gerik said, he and other researchers hope they can have comparable success in developing new, drought-resistant cotton strains.

He said improved management practices and development of quickmaturing varieties of cotton have helped many dryland planters avoid late-season drought, insects and other problems. But those varieties sometimes don't develop fibers with the strength, length, micronaire or other desirable qualities needed in today's

The isotope test may change all

"Because the climate and soils are quite variable in Texas, cotton is grown under a wide array of conditions, ranging from full irrigation to dryland," he said. "We need cotton varieties that are widely adapted to weather extremes and consistently produce high-quality fiber."

Gerik will lead a team that includes Drs. John Gannaway of Lubbock and Kamal El-Zik of College Station in the experiments, which began in January and will last through the end of 1994. Funded by the Texas State Support Committee for Cotton and Cotton, Inc., the team will analyze between 10 and 15 cotton varieties known to differ in yield and fiber

The cotton will be grown in both irrigated and dryland field experiments at Lubbock, Temple, and College Station.

Gerik expects to have preliminary data by the end of the summer growing season and analysis of the first season's data by the end of the

by Loretta Abbe • 628-6368 ****

Wilson's community 4th of July celebration was enjoyed by all those who attended. The attendance was somewhat light but a good time was had by all the people who did come out.

The P.T.O. and their dunkin booth proved to be the hit of the evening as various victims took their turns being dunked by some of the best pitching I have seen in quite a while.

Several groups had food booths and of course I had to try all of them: fajitas, BBQ beef, chicken, and ribs, deserts, and finally something cool to wash it all down.

Finally, it came time for the drawing for the three prizes being raffled off by the Lions Club. As the tickets were drawn by Steven Follis, everyone waited to see if they had won. Third prize, a freezer pack of meat, was won by Victoria Zepeda, and second prize of $100 of groceries from the United grocery store in Slaton, was won by Gladys Gicklhorn. Keith Weid was the winner of the first prize of $300.

The city of Wilson has contracted with a private contractor for the removal of city garbage. The new contractor has placed dumpsters in the alleys and as of now, the dumpsters are to be used in place of the old covered cans. The old cans will be picked up by Mr. Isham and he will remove the old can racks also. As soon as the cans and racks are picked up and accumulated by the city, they will be made available to the public at the cost of $5 per can and lid and $5 for the rack.

There is a limit as to what may be put into the dumpsters and this information is printed on the lids of the dumpsters. Citizens are urged to read and follow the direction on the dumpsters so that this new system can operate properly. City officials have indicated that the pickup day when the dumpsters will be emptied will be on Fridays, beginning on July 10, 1992.

A notice is being prepared detailing all the rules and restrictions on these dumpsters and this notice will be mailed out as soon as it has been approved by the city council.

There is a new civic group organizing in Wilson. This group is know as "PEOPLE". This stands for Progress Evolving Out of Persons Living Enthusiastically. This group will have its first public meeting on Saturday, July 11 at 9 a.m. in the Green Building (The Mercantile). The organizers invite anyone who is interested in boosting community spirit and who is interested in the positive growth of the city of Wilson to attend this Bobby W. Rine, a former pastor in this area and a retired home missionary will be the guest speaker at both services at the First Baptist Church of Wilson on July 12. Both services will be at the regular times.

"Thanks to Roy and Albert" Someone has really been working at the city park, cleaning, weeding, mowing, digging in the flower beds and generally attempting to make the park an asset to the community. I especially like the flower beds with the flowers spelling out "Wilson" in big blooming letters. Now if we can keep the jerks, who have been vandalizing the park and other places in town, at bay, maybe we can keep the park clean and have one that people will use and be proud of. Maybe we need to add some instructions to the tennis court sign so that people will know that the tennis court and the park are for playing on and in and not trash cans. Broken bottles and other junk not only look cruddy but can cause injury to the littler people who toddle around. Park your trash in the cans and then we can have a trashless park. After all, bottles and cans can be recycled.

Just a reminder of the garage and bake sale benefitting the anniversary committee of St. John Lutheran Church on July 18, with matching funds provided by the A.A.L. Branch #7946207.

Remember, even though the rains have stopped for a while, that the mosquitos are still hatching in that old tire, empty bucket, or whatever you may have in your yard that has any accumulated water standing in it. Please take the time to empty out this water and help cut down on the mosquito population.
