Planning phase completed; construction funds now sought for courthouse restoration project

by JUANELL JONES

The planning phase is finished and the paperwork has been submitted to apply for construction funds for the Lynn County Courthouse restoration project to restore the historic courthouse back to its original 1916 design. The Texas Historical Commission will consider the project for the second phase of funding – the construction phase – at their January board meeting, and local officials should know by the end of January whether the Lynn County project is approved in this year's round of funding.

Lynn County Commissioners on Monday signed a resolution supporting the courthouse restoration project, and letters of support from business leaders and others in the community have also been sought. A representative from Komatsu Architects firm, who designed the project plan, is also expected to attend the meeting to show their support of the project.

Projects submitted for the funding will be ranked by a subcommittee and then presented to the board of the Texas Historical Commission Courthouse Preservation Program in late January. We will have representatives present at that meeting to reinforce our desire for those funds," said Baker. "Although the subcommittee ranks the projects by a point system, the board does have the final say of which projects actually receive funding, and we want to be there to show our support for the project," he added.

The county's matching portion is $901,434, and our grant request is for $5 million. There are only $20 million available in this round of grant funds, so we are doing everything we can to reinforce to the Texas Historical Commission that we are wanting these funds," he added.

The Texas Historical Commission approved the overall master plan for the restoration project in December 2006, and the initial grant funds for the first phase of the project – the

A POPULAR ITEM on this year's Christmas gift list, according to a story last week, is some kind of tablet, meaning an electronic do-hickey like the Apple iPad or one of its several imitators. These tablets, according to the story, are popular because they are part computer, part "smartphone," and part e-reader.

I know what a computer is, and I also have an e-reader, which is a device for reading books from a screen instead of reading from a real book.

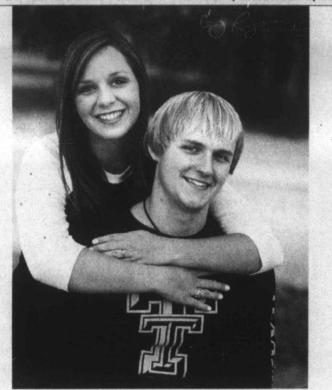

The so-called "smartphone" probably refers to a cell phone that does a lot more than just work like a telephone, although that's all I want one for. Cell phones these days take photos, offer global positioning information, send and receive e-mail, go online, tune in to TV stations, play music and are used by zillions of young people for text messaging, which surely is destroying any hope that the next generation will be able to spell any words with more than three letters,

I don't know what the iPad does, because sometime ago iQuit trying to keep up with the latest electronic advances. In fact, I don't know why they call it a tablet.

To those of us fortunate enough to be called senior citizens, a tablet is either (a) a pill taken with water, such as aspirin, or (b) a bunch of blank pages glued together at the top, so you can write on a page and then, if you wish, tear it out.

The word tablet brings to mind the Big Chief tablets used for decades by elementary school students in the U.S. The cover featured a picture of an Indian chief in full headdress. The paper was poor quality, but you could write on it, and it seems to me that a large tablet, about 8x10, with at least 50 sheets, only cost a nickel.

The iPad and other electronic tablets cost a lot more than that, even when 40 or 50 years of inflation is factored in.

Texas Tech, SPC team up to train new game wardens

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department hires about 50 new game wardens annually if it can find that many people trained for the job. Texas Tech University and South Plains College are now partners in a new transfer program designed to fill that need.

According to Mark Wallace, chairman of Texas Tech's Department of Natural Resources Management, the requirements to be a game warden changed about five years ago, so that people considered for the job had to have a four-year degree. They used to take people from all walks of life and put them through the department's own training program.

"Programs around the state are associate of arts degrees in criminal justice programs. There's no conduit for those folks to go get a 4-year degree outside of criminal justice," said Wallace. "We proposed to create a 2+2 program to train folks for game warden positions that are not limited to Texas Parks &Wildlife; they could work for New Mexico Game & Fish, U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service or a variety of other law enforcement/ wildlife-related agencies."

Students take two years in criminal justice at SPC to obtain the associates degree, then transfer to Texas Tech for two more years in natural resources management. If they go an additional summer at SPC, they can complete certification as a peace officer in Texas. This allows them to work in many small towns but does not allow them into a lot of the four-year degree tracks.

"We are very excited to have this agreement with Texas Tech that, I think, will enhance from both our perspectives, the educational quality of those students going into the game warden field," said Randy Robertson, department chairperson in Professional Services and Energy and assistant professor of Criminal Justice and Law Enforcement at South Plains College.

"Texas Tech has a great program that deals with the wildlife and conservation side of this job and we have a long reputation for giving a quality education to those who want to pursue criminal justice or law enforcement," Robertson said. "Students within this program also have the opportunity to continue their education with us to facilitate their attaining their Texas Peace Officer license through our police academy if they so choose; once they have attained their degrees through Texas Tech and SPC."

"The unique thing - and this is the biggest challenge we had getting it through the system - is that we're accepting courses that we don't offer here at Texas Tech for credit for one of our degrees," Wallace said. "So we're taking advantage of things offered at other schools to create essentially a new degree."

Doggone it, shop at home when you can.

Our local economy is fragile ...

Shopping locally is a vital part of our growth and prosperity.

Why send locally-owned, hard-earned dollars out of town to support someone else? Money spent in Lubbock or other surrounding towns does not support our community, our school, or our hospital.

The local businessperson pays the highest percentage of local taxes. Every time a business goes under, local taxes will go up in order to have the same tax base. That means homeowners and remaining businesses will inevitably pay more in taxes. So please, think before you shop out of town -- if prices seem cheaper elsewhere, are they really going to be cheaper in the long run? What will happen when you can no longer buy what you need in our town and there are no businesses left?

And all local businesses especially appreciate it when our taxing entities -- our school, county, hospital and city -- spend the taxes they collect from us in our own town and county.

Merit Finalist... Eula Tomamao, left, a Tahoka 3rd grader, pictured here with Elementary Principal, Alecia Hancock, was named as a Merit Finalist in the Distinguished Youth of Texas Program held in San Antonio Nov. 25-27. She advanced to the top 10 overall for the Little Miss Division. She is the daughter of Eugene and Alma Tomamao of Tahoka. The large trophy is for being named Merit Finalist and the small trophy was for being a participant in the program.

Drainage problems caused by enlargement of FM roads

Conservation district officials attending the 71st Annual Meeting of Soil and Water Conservation District Directors in San Antonio united behind the San Patricio Soil and Water Conservation District (SWCD) with headquarters in Sinton, in an effort to petition the Texas Department of Public Transportation (TXDOT) to reassess the agency's specifications when grading back slopes along Farm to Market roads. "The problem that we are having in San Patricio County, and presumably in other counties in the state, is where the topography is relatively flat and the roadways are elevated. Drainage ditches which were built with adequate drainage in the 40's and 50's are being filled with soil as roads are being reconstructed and enlarged," said Jon Whatley, member of the San Patricio SWCD.

"When TXDOT determines the need to widen farm to market roads, the problem begins with the road width being widened and the bar ditch's drainage area being reduced because no additional right-of-way is being purchased. What happens next is when a heavy rainfall is received, the ditch overflows into adjacent fields causing erosion problems and damage to farm land," said Whatley.

"It's like the domino effect. When erosion occurs on crop fields next to the road obviously water carrying sediment goes back into the bar ditch or finds alternate land routes which carries sediment off to places where it is not needed or wanted. As a result, agriculture is in some cases receiving a black eye for contributing to pollution problems when the situation may not necessarily be agriculture's fault, particularly when it has no control over what the state is doing to improve FM roads," added Whatley

What Texas SWCDS want is for TXDOT to provide adequate drainage on existing and newly enlarged FM roads to prevent farm land from becoming subject to erosion. The problem they say could be corrected or minimized through proper surveying, studying natural runoff water flow, enlarging drainage ditches, purchasing easements and scheduling maintenance of the ditches.

Prescription Drugs can be harmful if used improperly

Teens nationwide are targeted with various drugs, and most are not aware of the consequences. Although there are a variety of illegal drugs teens have experimented with, there has also been a rise in prescription drug abuse. A common question from teenagers is, "How can prescription drugs be harmful when they're prescribed by doctors?"

safe when they are taken by the patient whom they are prescribed for," says Lisa Killam-Worrall, Pharm.D., assistant professor of pharmacy practice and director of the Drug Information Center at the Texas A&M. "Danger incurs when people decide to take someone else's medication without knowing what it is, the dosage amount or the side effects associated with it."

It is also all too common that teenagers mix pills with other drugs or with alcohol, thereby increasing the risk of death from accidental overdose.

There are several dangers in taking a prescribed drug that is not yours and in mixing pills. The most common are drowsiness, impaired ability to drive and panic attacks.

Remember, it's only safe to use prescription medications when prescribed for you by a doctor for a current problem. If you are unsure of a prescription, ask your pharmacist for more

Path of diabetic has no end but many beginnings

One of the biggest misconceptions facing newly di-; agnosed diabetics is the beliefthat with proper medication and lifestyle changes, they can cure: themselves of the disease.

"People with this belief." come to their diabetes education class motivated to make; whatever changes are necessary. to rid themselves of this dreaded disease only to learn there. is no cure," says Manuel Guajardo, RN, with the Texas A&M: Health Science Center Coastal Bend Health Education Center: Diabetes Education Program. "They're now faced with the fact that the rest of their lives: will be aimed at merely controlling their diabetes."

However, this initial enthusiasm is not misguided. Guajar-: do points out controlling one's diabetes can begin with minor changes in regards to diet and exercise, changes that would serve to benefit any individual, regardless of diabetes.

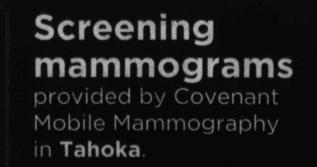

"It's all about making choices - the choice to begin walking on a daily basis, the choice to begin eating a more balanced diet, the choice to begin taking medications as prescribed," Guajardo says.

Besides controlling the disease; many diabetics find these new lifestyle choices lead to a variety of other positives such as weight loss, reduced cholesterol and lower blood pressure.

"Once a person with diabetes realizes that controlling diabetes is very doable, the idea is not to set huge goals right away but to encourage the development of healthy habits," Guajardo says. "With this and the expression of genuine care and concern for a person's physical, emotional, and mental wellbeing, a diabetes educator can assist patients with overcoming any barriers or misconceptions that could impede their road to success."

'U Can Share' 12 Cans of Christmas food drive sets 5,000 lb. goal here

A local food drive in Tahoka has set a goal of 5,000 pounds of canned/dried goods for collection, in the annual 'U Can Share' 12 Cans of Christmas Food Drive scheduled for Dec. 1-12.

"This year's goal is 5,000 pounds of food, which will all be shared locally between the Food Pantry based at the Tahoka Church of Christ and the Lynn County Pioneers Senior Citizens Center," says Elizabeth Tew, coordinator of the event.

"I believe this is an attainable goal, and will benefit local people. The local food pantry provides food for 100 families U Can Share Food Drive raised 2,000 pounds of food, which was very appreciated. However, in 2009 the food drive collected 5,600 pounds of food, so I know it can be done, and we are aiming for the 5,000 pound collection this year," she added.

Other ways to contribute to the 12 Cans of Christmas food drive include the Boy Scouts "Scouting For Food" Drive and the City/County Library's annual "Food For Fines" food drive.

To participate in the Boy Scouts event, local residents must place bags of food on their front porches on Saturday, Dec. 3 (must be visible from the U Can Share barrels will be placed in several locations in the community including Thriftway Grocery, Tahoka ISD campuses, First Baptist Church and First United Methodist Church. Canned or dried goods of any kind are welcome. At Thriftway, there will also be prepackaged $5 sacks or $10 sacks of canned/dried goods available for purchase, or of course individual canned goods are also welcome.

"The population of Tahoka is 2,673," says Tew. "If everyone could give two pounds of food, we could easily attain our goal of 5,000 pounds of food, all of which comes directly back to our citizens here. Last year the

Texas Farm Bureau's annual meeting is Dec. 3-5

Farmers and ranchers from across the Lone Star State will attend the 78th Annual Meeting of Texas Farm Bureau, the state's largest farm and ranch organization, Dec. 3-5 in Corpus Christi to shape the future of Texas agriculture.

Voting delegates representing county Farm Bureaus across the state will craft policy positions and prepare for challenges that lie ahead in 2012 and beyond

"We take this responsibility very seriously," said Texas Farm Bureau President Kenneth Dierschke. "Farm Bureau policy originates at the grassroots level, reflecting the needs of those who produce the abundant food and fiber we all enjoy. It's our job to do what is best for Texas agriculture."

During the annual meeting, more than 1,000 Texas farmers and ranchers will convene to discuss the latest agricultural issues, recognize successes from 2011, as well as evaluate the organization's policies.

Policy discussions will likely center on current farm programs and crop insurance, currently being debated in Washington, D.C.

"This year's devastating drought is a painful reminder that new farm legislation needs to be designed to keep farmers on the land during lean times," Dierschke said. "Crop insurance is a vital part of that safety net."

The meeting will begin Saturday, Dec. 3, with registration, along with TFB Member Services exhibits, at the American Bank Center. Other Saturday events include the Free Enterprise Speech Contest and several expert speakers, who will present the current outlook for Texas and American agriculture.

The meeting will continue on Sunday, Dec. 4, with a devotional, followed by member recognition awards, Pioneer Award presentations and the naming of the 2011 Outstanding Young Farmer & Rancher. Sunday afternoon will also feature Dierschke's annual address to the convention delegates.

The meeting concludes Monday, Dec. 5, with the organization's annual business session, including the election of the president and board of directors. Dierschke is seeking his 10th one-year term as Texas Farm Bureau president.

Conserving natural resources more important than ever

The October 17 dust storm in Lubbock was a startling reminder of how skies across much of the nation often looked in the 1930s before the creation of federal and state conservation programs.

"The ongoing severe statewide drought, combined with high winds and excessive heat, has created unprecedented conditions that make conservation efforts more important than ever," says Salvador Salinas, Texas state conservationist for the USDA-Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS).

Born out of the Dust Bowl, the USDA-NRCS was created to develop techniques to combat erosion. The soil types common across the southern High Plains are very productive for crops, but also highly erodible in some areas, making them especially vulnerable to wind erosion.

"Since 1935 our agency and partners in conservation have been working with landowners to advance soil conservation techniques and agriculture technology," says Salinas.

Salinas encourages all landowners in Texas to seek assistance for land management during the drought this year from their local NRCS office or their county's Soil and Water Conservation District. Both are located in the USDA Service Center in nearly every county in Texas.

Conservation practices such as leaving last year's crop in the field, reducing the number of times the field is plowed, planting cover crops, planting wind breaks, and rotational grazing to promote plant growth and improve ground cover all help decrease wind erosion.

With no relief in the weather pattern, more agriculture producers than ever sought NRCS drought management help last year. Since October 2010, conservation efforts to provide cleaner air, improve water quality and quantity, and reduce soil erosion were voluntarily applied on 9.9 million acres in Texas. This compares to 8.3 million acres the year before.

Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP), a USDA Farm Bill program, is the largest conservation program for farmers and ranchers to receive financial and technical help with structural and management of conservation practices on agricultural land.

AgTexas customers receive checks

Just in time for the holiday season, more than 1,325 long-time customers of AgTexas Farm Credit Services will receive a welcome surprise in the mail soon — a check equal to a 1.25 percent reduction in their cost of borrowing from the rural lending cooperative.

The checks total $2.1 million in allocated equities that the Ag-Texas Board of Directors elected to distribute to borrower-stock-holders based on the co-op's strong financial results this year.

"In spite of the current drought cycle and ongoing economic conditions, AgTexas has achieved sound income, capital and credit quality in 2011, and we are pleased to be able to return earnings to our customerstockholders," said Mitchell Harris, AgTexas chief executive officer.

Allocated equity is patronage money that was earned in a previous year but allocated for future distribution. This latest distribution of allocated equities represents patronage that was declared on the cooperative's 2000 earnings.
