WOOING MORPHEUS. A Cup of Hot Milk is a Better Help Than All the Medicines Known. A physician recommends a cup of hot bouillon or hot milk, sipped slowly, but while still hot, before going to bed, as a better sleep inducer than all the opiates of the pharmacopoeia.

The sick man sent for a doctor much against his will, says the New York Tribune, but his wife had insisted on it, and so he gave way. The doctor came and looked grave. He felt the patient's pulse, inspected his tongue, listened to his heart, and then sat down in silence to think awhile looking braucelerly wise through his spectacles.

"There!" exclaimed his wife; "I always told you so, John Henry. Oh why will you smoke those hurtful things? You see the harm they have done you is perceptible to the doctor at once. Oh, doctor, you will forbid him to use them any more, will you not? I'm so glad we called you in."

"Well, you see, doctor," replied the patient, somewhat rattled at this onslaught of his wife, and ready to throw something at the doctor's head, and just as ready to punch his own forehead allowing himself to be badgered into calling in a physician at all. "I only used them sparingly. A couple of boxes a day at the outside, and I'm sure I don't use nearly as much as I seem to do. For I only smoke half of them, taking a pull or two and then laying the cigarette down on my desk, and forgetting it many times till it is almost consumed."

"No," said the doctor. "There, Jane," said the sick man triumphantly. "Tobacco heart indeed!" replied the wife. You may not have gone so far as that yet. There are plenty of lesser but still serious complaints that your constant habit of smoking cigarettes has brought upon you, else why did the doctor at once ask if you used them? Why did you do so, doctor?

"Yes, why?" chimed in the patient anxiously. "Well," replied the doctor, who had been smiling quietly behind his glasses all the time, watching the unworking of this little family jar, "I only asked because I smelt tobacco smoke in the room, and wanted to borrow a cigarette for myself."

GEMS FROM INGERSOLL.

Extracts from a criticism of Count Tolstoy's "Kreutzer Sonata" by Col. R. G. Ingersoll in North American Review for September. Tolstoi seems to be a stranger to the heart of woman.

The perpetual fear of death gives love intensity and sacredness. According to his idea the world ought to be filled with peasants. To him life is but a breathing spell between the verdict and the execution. Following parts of the New Testament he regards love as essentially impure.

He advocates a doctrine that would leave the basest of mankind the rulers of the world. Love is the perfume of the heart; it is not subject to the will of husbands or kings of God. Love is not the child of fear; it is not the result of fear. No one can love on compulsion.

He regards a flower with suspicion, believing that beneath every blossom lies a coiled serpent. Count Tolstoi would establish slavery in every house; he would make every husband a tyrant and every wife a trembling serf. Those who are truly married are neither masters nor servants. The idea of obedience is lost in the desire for the happiness of each.

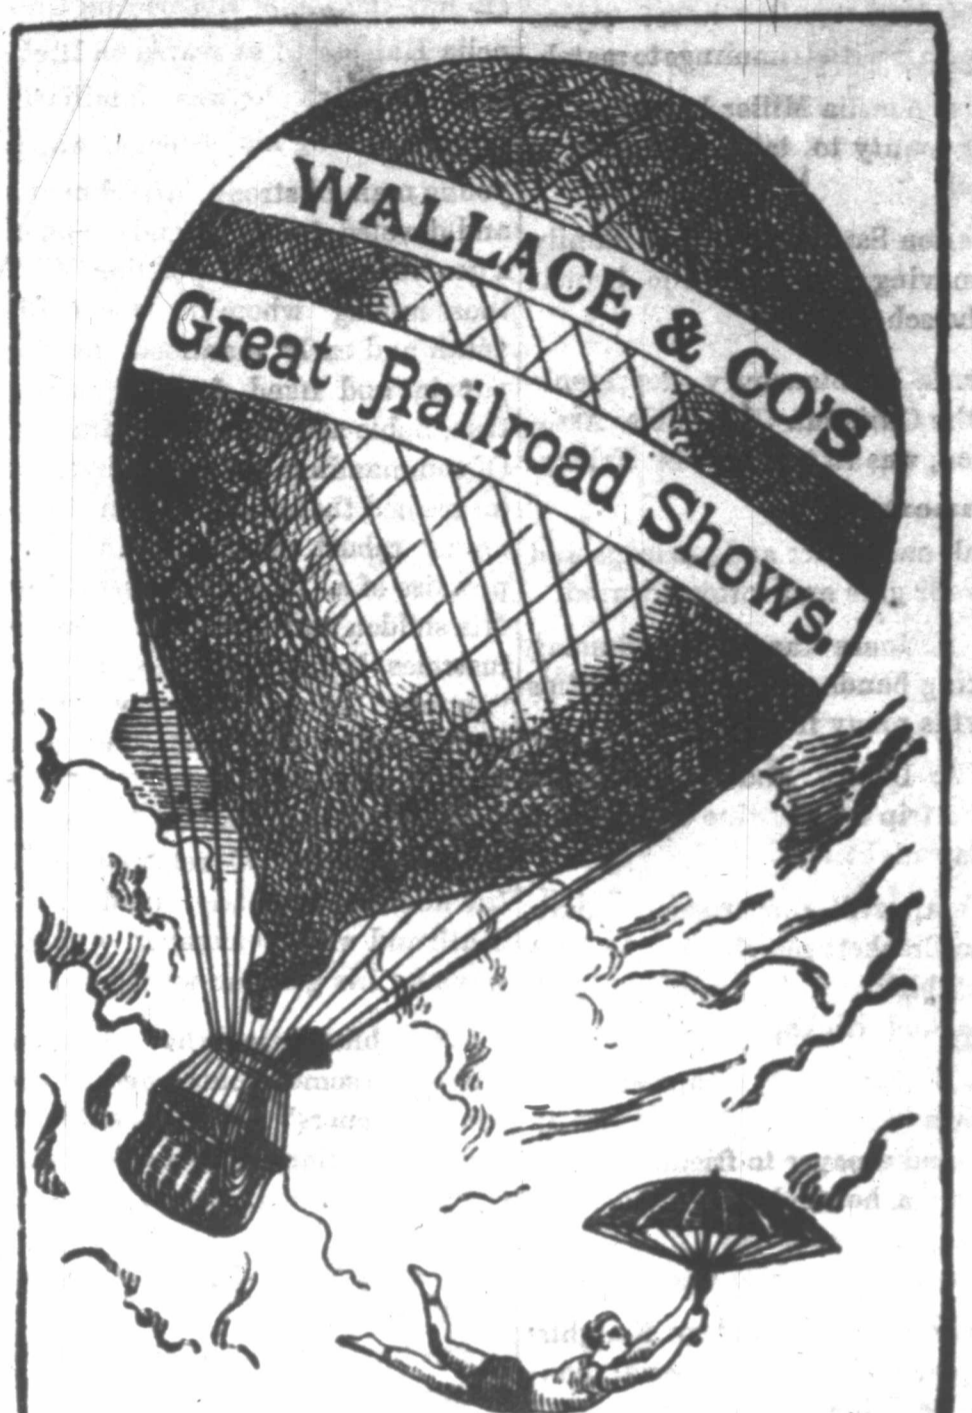

Love is not a convict, to be detained with bolts and chains. Love is the highest expression of liberty. Love neither commands nor obeys. He forgets that the best and purest of human beings are controlled, for the most part unconsciously, by the hidden, subtle tendencies of nature.

To him that which is called progress is, in fact, a profanation, and property is a something that the organized few have stolen from the unorganized many. Of all passions that can take possession of the heart or brain jealousy is the worst. It endeavors to transmute the very gold of love into the dross of shame and crime.

The one thing constant, the one peak that rises above all clouds, the one window in which the light forever burns, the one star that darkness cannot quench, is woman's love. He is not only a Christian, but has the courage of his convictions and goes without hesitation to the logical conclusion.

SMILES. The pack-mule knows all about back taxes.—Yonkers Gazette. It is the cooper who does a "staving business."—Washington Critic.

When a minister is "called," does he always show his hand?—Cincinnati Commercial. "It's all up with me," said the aeronaut as his balloon collapsed.—Washington Hatchet.

He is filled with what might be called a merciless pity, a sympathy almost malicious. Had he lived a few centuries ago he might have founded a religion; but the most he can now do is, perhaps, to create the necessity for another asylum.

He endeavors to show that love is a delusion; that at best, it can last but a few days; that it must of necessity be succeeded by indifference, then by disgust, lastly by hatred; that in every Garden of Eden is a serpent of jealousy, and that the brightest days end with the yawn of ennui.

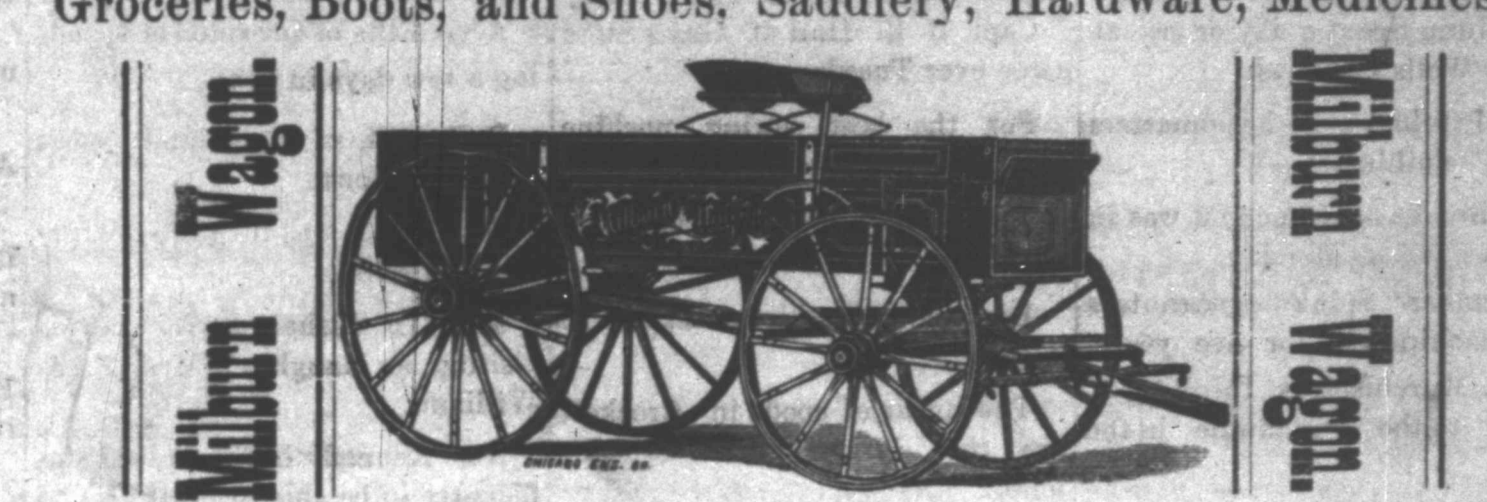

He seems really to think that there is a love superior to human love; that the love of man for woman, of woman for man is, after all, a kind of glittering degradation; that it is better to love God than woman; better to love the invisible phantom of the skies than the children upon our knees.

I say that women are better than men; their hearts are more unreservedly given; in the web of their lives sorrow is inextricably woven with the greatest joys; self-sacrifice is part of their nature, and at the behest of love and maternity they walk willingly and joyously down to the very gates of death.

The story of "The Kreutzer Sonata" seems to have been written for the purpose of showing that woman is at fault; that she has no right to be attractive, no right to be beautiful; and that she is morally responsible for the outcome of her throat, for the pose of her body, for the symmetry of her limbs, for the end of her lips and for the dimples in her cheeks.—Nashville American.

Ed. COURNER.—As we have seen nothing from our little city in some time I will endeavor to give you a few dots: cotton picking is all the go now; the farmers in this section are gathering their crops very rapidly. Corn is very scarce down here; it is worth seventy-five cents and one dollar per bu. Our worthy citizen Mr. A. B. Mulligan has gone to Lovelady; he will make that his future home. W. S. Hogue is still a candidate for justice of peace; he was defeated in the primary but as the nominee has moved away Mr. Hogue is before the people again.—We are sorry to say that Mr. J. M. Porter's youngest son, Jay, is quite ill this week. We are all in favor of hog law down here. Success to The COURIER. M. R. S.

TANNER'S SPRINGS. Here we are again with a few dots from this section. Crops are good, corn very good. The cotton worms are at work and are likely to injure it. A mission sermon was preached here last Sunday by Rev. R. B. Brown. The program for the day's services was as follows: Sunday school at half past nine. At ten we had a lecture on Sunday School work by Prof. A. B. Bryant, Superin't. S. Jackson and teacher, Miss Phillis Johnson. One of the scholars Miss Mary Peters responded and talked to the point briefly. Prof. Bryant urged the parents to give more attention to the importance of having their children enrolled in the Sunday Schools. After this a welcome address was given by Mrs. Ella Brown, President, Mrs. Sarah Johnson, Vice President and Mrs. A. Hutchings, Treasurer of the "Home Mission Society."

At eleven Rev. R. B. Brown took his stand to argue the home mission subject. He took his text in the 2nd, 1-2 Philippians: "If therefore, any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfill ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind." After preaching dinner was served. Then the crowd, about 300, marched to the water side to see something that many had never seen, a blind man, Antony Bailey, baptised. Such times as there were at that moment will never be witnessed again. COLORED SUBSCRIBERS. COLTHARP.

Ed. COURNER.—In the issue of the Economist of September 5th, I see S. T. Beasley takes issue with my own article. What I wrote was not intended to get up a controversy between parties not directly interested but for the purpose of informing said committee that it was generally believed Judge Davis's contest should have been granted, as it could have done no injury to any one. Does he mean to say in his article that I did contest the election, after denying that I did? I simply say to the gentleman that I did not make such contest, and can establish such fact. He takes issue again in his definition of the duties of the executive committee, and says "their duties are simply to count the votes and to declare the result." That is just what I claimed their duties to be. No one claimed they had power to summon witnesses or administer oaths, and there is no necessity for this, if the votes had been counted from the ballots cast. He says, "after the primaries have been held and the judges of the election at each precinct have certified to the results at said voting places; and the results have been summed up by the executive committee, the committee could not change the result." What result does he mean, simply the tally-sheets? Was this result arrived at by a count of the votes by the Executive Committee, which he says was their duty from statements furnished by the managers at each box? How does he or any of the committee know that their statements were correct, or that there were not fraudulent votes cast at said boxes, especially in view of the fact that charges of fraud were pending? I would like for the gentleman to show that I expressed any dissatisfaction in my article except as to Davis and Madden. But he says "that word primary" that is where the harness pinches it.

Now I can inform the gentleman that I have worked in the domestic harness and at a time when it tried men's souls to do so, and if his allusion to independent candidates is to me, he is badly mistaken.

Z. R. JONES.

That tired, aching feeling, which is experienced by so many people living in malarial districts, can be cured by taking Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. 50 cents. It is pleasant to the taste, and it is as large as the other brand and retails for 50 cents.
