NATHAN'S WIFE.

"Guadalupe!"

"I do not know how we shall ever call her by so extraordinary a name, said the elder Miss Appleby.

"We can't call her by any other," castic tongue among these four sisters. Miss Prudence and Miss Hope Appleby sighed.

There was the sound of carriage big, white Puritan house. The four sisters got upon their feet. The carriage stopped: There alighted first a man of thirty with the straight Appleby profile; then a tiny creature | feet and the occasion. enveloped in wraps and wearing a veil over her face.

That night, when Nathan had left her to go down to his sisters, the young woman threw herself headlong upon the bed and clenched her fingers in her long tresses, sobbing in an agony of homesickness, fear, disappointment and heartache.

And while she lay there and Nathan. having come to the end of his interwith his sisters, walked up and down before the house with his cigar, the four Misses Appleby, in their straight black dresses and their straight white profiles, sat and discussed, so far as they might be said to descend to so undignified and trivial an action, the marriage, one of the parties to it and the chances of happiness which might be in store for the other. They did not pretend to themselves or any one else to be pleased with the marriage. There was a terrible honesty about these ancient ladies, up to deertain point. The honesty did not go so far as to admit that Nathan ruined his share of the family estate through unfortunate ventures in Mexico, and received into the house of the young Mexican girl's father had. upon the latter's desk, found a large marrying Guadalupe Miron. But it did go far enough for them unflinchingly to admit that for Nathan to have brought home a foreigner, a girl brought up in a religion which to their Unitarianism seemed idolatrous. a girl whose whole habits of thought. whose whole atmosphere and shaping experiences had been so different from their own and the cherished traditions of the Applebys was a most terrible

There was a storm coming up over the picturesque Massachusetts coast. If we do not hurry we shall not be in before the rain comes," said Mrs. Nathan Appleby. The name suited her no better now than it had a year ago. She was Guadalupe only, with her small, soft, olive face; her black eyes, her marvelous hands and

A wave of color mounted to Guadalupe's brown cheek like a flush of sunset behind a dusky cloud. "Better than my husband? What do you mean?" She stood before him trembling from head to foot.

THE INCOME TAX.

The positive announcement that President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle have finally concluded to urge upon congress the passage of a law taxing incomes will please a large majority of democrats There will be opposition to such an act on the part of some but the great mass of the party will fall in line and applaud the proposed change in the methods of raising revenue. Our Clark friends last year affected to frighten from support of the regular ticket those who were not posted as to the nature and history of such a tax by declaring that it was a species of paternalism in essential contravention of the basic principles of democracy. With the small appropriation of $130,000 the Iowa Board of Commissioners have prepared a wonderful display which cannot help but redound to the credit of the Hawkeye State, The work of preparing the exhibit has been under the special direction of Secretary Chase said in explanation, "to expend our funds only in those directions where our State is strongest. It was better to concentrate our efforts in this way than to make more exhibits and have less money for each of them."

The art work in the State building is largely duplicated, so far as woman's part goes, in the Woman's building. It consists of ceramics, finely decorated pottery, and the like. It is in charge of Ora E. Miller of Cedar Rapids. A beautiful room has been set apart in the building, and the women of Sioux Falls, Des Moines, Dubuque, and other cities have united.

A METHOD OF PREVENTING LAND WASHING.

Clayey Soll Suffers Heavily-To Increa Yields-A Cure for Heaves-More Sheep - Farm Notes and Home Hints.

I was glad to notice in a late number of Coleman's Rural World, that somebody besides myself is concerned about the washing of land. I have felt concerned about, that matter ever since I first came to the clayey Western region, writes C. A. Osgood. More than thirty years ago I wrote in the N. Y. Tribune that it seemed as if nature had taken the contract of filling up the Gulf of Mexico, and had impressed the farmers of this region into her service on the job, and that they seemed to be good and willing helpers, as none of them that I know seemed to care for the washing of their lands if so be the number of acres were left and the ink not washed out of their title deeds.

scored over with gullies, they would put some straw in the deeper ones and plow all full of top spli and con-sider the harm all remoded, never seeming to realize that every operation of that kind lessened the average depth of fertile soil an inch or more, which in time would bring the plow down to sterile clay and hard-pan. Sandy or gravelly land, even of pretty steep slope, will absorb water as fast as is usually falls

When their fields became well

But it is quite different with a clayey soil, so that it suffers not only from the effects of the washing, but also from the loss of the water itself in case of short, rapid showers in times of drouth. Once on a bright, I came to a creek, wallowing bank full of thick, muddy water; there had been a heavy shower higher up, but none where I was.

We are depleting the fertility of this Western region pretty rapidly by the exportation of so much of the products of the soil. For this we get some return in cash and goods. washing away of manures.

If some grocers urge another baking powder upon you in place of the "Royal," it is because of the greater profit upon it. This of itself is evidence of the superiority of the "Royal." To give greater profit the other must be a lower cost powder, and to cost less it must be made with cheaper and inferior materials, and thus, though selling for the same, give less value to the consumer.

To insure the finest cake, the most wholesome food, be sure that no substitute for Royal Baking Powder is accepted by you.
