NO REPORT FROM THE SUBCOMMITTEE YET.

It Has Not Been Determined What to Do With Sugar Yet—The Hatch Bill Discussed Before the House Committee on Agriculture.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The Wilson bill was the subject of an earnest consultation among the senators yesterday. It has reached a certain stage of completeness and may be thrown out of gear by one single article that article is sugar, and it was generally understood that if a definite agreement could be reached on this article it would then be possible to agree upon everything else and that the bill could be reported without delay. It is now understood that by mutual concessions and frequent consultations the details made by those Democratic senators who opposed the bill in the form in which it was first presented have been met and tentatively agreed upon, but even these agreements are subject to the approval of the treasury department and the needs of the government in the matter of revenue. Secretary Carlisle was with the members of the committee most of the day and met with them again yesterday evening to discuss and compare changes.

SENATE REPEALS.—The Democratic members of the finance committee continued their work on the Wilson bill, but had not at the close of the sitting, made such progress as to justify the chairman in calling a meeting of the full committee for tomorrow. The members were also reluctant as at any previous time and declined to give out any information as to what had been accomplished or what remains to be done. The Wilson bill has been found to be so great a task as to render speedy action impossible, and added that the whole bill is so intricate that it is impossible to make it public until the work has been entirely concluded. There is little room for doubt that the committee has virtually decided upon a duty upon coal, iron ore and lead ore and the many other articles on the free list in the Wilson bill, but the committee refused to make an announcement of their intentions until the discussion on this point until the bill can be presented as a whole.

Want to Buy Bullion.—Secretary Carlisle yesterday received from J. T. Rapley, 136 Liberty street, New York, a letter in which he makes a proposition to purchase from the government on behalf of himself and his associates from $50,000,000 to 75,000,000 ounces of silver bullion now in the treasury at 62 cents per ounce, providing that congress shall enact a law levying a duty of 12 1/2 cents per ounce on all silver coined or uncoined in the United States within the next five years. The letterhead is as follows: "The British and American Financial and Industrial Investment Syndicate." And under it is written these words: "A tariff for revenue only, one sure means toward the accomplishment of the object." The treasurer of the syndicate expressed any opinion as to this letter.

Quorum Vanished.—The Democrats secured a quorum yesterday on two roll calls, which were preliminary to securing a vote on the silver bill. The quorum disappeared and there was an adjournment. The friends of the measure now think they have broken the ice and can go ahead. This regard to the race for the senate to succeed himself, it is generally understood here that he is desirous of retiring from the senate when his present term expires and moreover that he will retire.

Two Hours' Session.—The senate held a two hours' session yesterday, the whole of which was given to a speech by Senator Frye in opposition to President Cleveland's Hawaiian policy. After a short executive session the senate adjourned.

LONDON, March 6.—The queen's speech proroguing parliament is purely formal, only fifteen lines in length, and begins: "Upon this occasion, when your labors have been unprecedented in amount and vigor, I regret that your release from them will be little more than nominal." Levi Levens, one of the workmen, was blown to atoms.

Indiana Shooting.—SHELBYVILLE, Ind., March 1.—A fatal shooting affair took place at Moscow early yesterday morning. A man named George Mounts, a prominent farmer, three times in the breast with a 38-caliber revolver. The latter was using a club and was the aggressor. Mounts is dying. Barlow is in custody. An old grudge was the cause.

Scire Facias to Revive Judgment.

THE STATE OF TEXAS.

To the Sheriff or any Constable of Houston County Greeting:

Whereas, oath has this day been made before me by J. F. Leebker that W. T. Rhone is a transient person so that the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him; Therefore you are hereby commanded that you, by making publication of this writ in some newspaper published in Houston County, No. 1, in said county of Houston, on the 28th day of March A. D. 1894, to answer the petition of the said J. F. Leebker, plaintiff, against the said W. T. Rhone, defendant, and to show cause, if any he has, why said judgment should not be granted, said petition being and alleging in substance as follows:

That on the 27th day of December, A. D. 1892 in said court, plaintiff recovered a judgment against defendant for the sum of two hundred and thirty dollars and ninety cents, ($237.90) principal and interest on a promissory note executed by defendant to plaintiff, and interest on said judgment at 10 per cent per annum from said date and all costs of suit; that said judgment still remains wholly unpaid; that no execution has been issued on said judgment within twelve months after the rendition thereof; that said judgment has become dormant, but is still a valid and subsisting debt, and plaintiff prays for this writ of Scire Facias to revive said judgment so that execution may issue thereon. Herein fail not, and of this writ make due return at the regular term of the Justice Court for Precinct No. 1, in said county of Houston to be held on the 28th day of March A. D. 1894, as the law directs.

Sooner or later a fast young man must slow down even if he is in the breeze.

It is by all odds the best of all. Mr. Chas. Metzger, 217 Geyer Ave., St. Louis, Mo., is of the same opinion. He says: "Salvation Oil is the best remedy we have ever used in our family, and it is the best remedy on earth."

Happy are they that bear their detractions, and can put them to meaning.

They Said She Would Die But Hood's Sarsaparilla Proved It Merit.

The following statement will be of interest to the many friends of Mrs. Wright all over Alabama and Georgia. He was for ten years a locomotive engineer and is now machinist for the Coca Manufacturing Co.

"I know the good there is in Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it has been proved in the case of my wife. In the summer of 1902, she was taken ill with malarial fever, which the physicians succeeded in breaking up. But then followed a severe illness like typhoid. She seemed to be growing worse every day, and our friends were all around her, but she would surely die."

I was induced to have her take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which was followed by the best results. She has now taken eight bottles and has used six boxes of Hood's Pills, and is in perfect health, and therefore she accepted most willingly an offer from Florence.

There she had met Gino, whose native city was here, and he was a sculptor and, though young, his talent soon made him well known. He belonged to an aristocratic family, and had persuaded his parents with great difficulty to let him study art. But now he had attained an assured position, and he hoped soon to be able to make Angelina his wife. Up to this time he had hesitated to tell his parents of his love for the poor teacher, knowing how proud they were. He had intended to spend Christmas with Angelina, and they had made many plans. First they were to go to mass, and then old Margherita, the faithful servant, who had followed Angelina to Florence, would light the fire in the big chimney, and they would sit and watch the traditional log of wood burn, and have a nice little supper. But now the poor girl saw nothing before her but loneliness.

She smiled through her tears, and as if her decision were taken at last, she said: "I will go with you, Gino, now, go quickly, for I am so tempted to keep you."

Soon it was dark, and Angelina dressed carefully for the occasion. While she had been studying art, she had seen Gino in the distance with a gentleman, his father, and her heart nearly stood still. She hurriedly hid her face in her hand, and she had not noticed her, and she was glad that he had not stopped to speak to her.

She hurriedly hid her face in her hand, and she had not noticed her, and she was glad that he had not stopped to speak to her.

As she stepped into San Marco she told Giovanni where to wait for her, and he returned to the gondola. She had not seen her, but he had exchanged a sign with some one in the distance.

The mass began, and she became completely absorbed in the service. She recalled to herself by the close vicinity of some one, who seemed to protect her from the crowd. She did not look up. She knew it was Gino, and a sudden calm came to her. Her eyes became lost to all but the pleasure of knowing that he was there.

Mass was over. People hurried to get home. It was bitter cold. Angelina stepped out into the air, and she suddenly gazed at her hand. Drawing it through his arm he led her to a gondola. No word was spoken until Angelina found herself tucked under the cover. She said: "Gino, my dear, you must go to your mother. I have to-morrow to be happy."

"I shall go to my mother, darling, never fear. And now tell me about yourself. It is so good that you came!" She told him of her home-longing and of her sudden decision, her journey, and then of the nice old lady, who she said: "Gino, my dear, you must go to your mother. I have to-morrow to be happy."

"Here she is mother dear!" he says at last, "tell her that we may be happy."

Agelina stands in a beautiful parlor, trembling before an old lady in an arm-chair. She sees a hand stretched in welcome, and hears the words: "My daughter."

"She kneels at the feet of the dear old lady, and all she says is: 'Oh, I have so wished that you might be my mother since yesterday.'"

For she is indeed the marchesa. She cannot rise, she cannot extend both hands, but her eyes tell of the love she has in her heart for the chosen wife of her son.

"You shall never be alone again at Christmas, my daughter. Make me Gino happy!"

EVER, never, will I forgive you, all my joy—and now good-by, Gino!"

It was a young lady who spoke, a beautiful one, too, and her eyes were full of anger as she looked at the young man before her.

Looking his hat in the hand, she said: "I am sorry, Angelina, but my mother calls me, and if you had a son, an only son, you would feel deeply hurt if he were to refuse to spend Christmas with you."

"Oh, I—!" Angelina broke down and suddenly burst into a flood of tears. Her lover then thought so little of her that he had never considered her own loneliness, and she had always lived on one of the small islands, and she had never been to the public schools. No one there knew that she had been one in a rich home of her own, with loving parents. Her mother had died in her childhood, and her father, who her poor father had also left her, when she most needed him. A lawyer had informed her that the fortune which she thought she possessed had been lost in speculation, and he persuaded her to sell or rent the small little home in which she had always lived on one of the small islands, and she had never been to the public schools. No one there knew that she had been one in a rich home of her own, with loving parents.

have forgotten to buy her a Christmas gift if it had not been for you!"

In a few words she then told the old lady that she was a teacher, earning her own living. By that time they had reached Meororia, and turning into one of the little streets branching off from that, they stood before an old palace.

Upon ringing, the door was opened by an old gondolier, who seemed to do also duty as a servant.

"Madonna santa!" he cried, "what has happened to the marchesa?" and had he not been prevented, he would in his fright have called all the household together. But the marchesa said: "Give me your arm, Battista, and keep quiet." Then, turning to the girl standing in the door, she added: "Grazie, thanks a thousand times, dear child. And please give me your name and address. I hope we may meet again."

Angelina gave the desired information reluctantly, for she felt almost hurt at the brevity of this farewell. But the old lady suddenly turned her hand and, pressing Angelina's, said gently: "Go and buy Margherita her present. Good-by."

Angelina stood alone. Why had she felt almost happy, leading this old lady? Now she realized again how lonely she was. But Margherita, at least, would be glad to see her, so she hurried to dear old San Marco and tried to pray. Alas! she could think of nothing. "Ah!" she sighed, "if I only had a mother!"

Stopping at one of the stores she purchased a warm shawl for Margherita, then crossing the piazza, she took a gondola, and in a short time found herself at the door of her own home.

It was a quiet little place, containing only a few rooms, but it was her home, and she had once been rich and happy in it. Margherita was watching for her darling mistress. The people who had rented it were from the Calore and had gone to their country home for the holidays, leaving an old man in charge of the house. He had been gondolier for Angelina's parents, so that he and Margherita were old friends, and he too loved Angelina "la patronina," as he called her.

Soon the poor child had forgotten her loneliness, sitting and chatting with those two humble but devoted friends.

The next evening was Christmas eve, and Angelina, made some purchases also for the old man, and provided for a little merry supper. Then, the gondolier, was to take her to mass at seven, and then she would come home and have a quiet evening.

As she returned from her errands, she saw a gondola leave her door, and Giovanni standing at the door gazing after it with a curious expression. He was holding a little log of wood in his hand.

"What is that, Giovanni?" "I am to give this to the signorina. He handed her the little log. Angelina well knew where it came from. While she had been studying art, she had seen Gino in the distance with a gentleman, his father, and her heart nearly stood still. She hurriedly hid her face in her hand, and she had not noticed her, and she was glad that he had not stopped to speak to her.

Now it was dark, and Angelina dressed carefully for the occasion. While she had been studying art, she had seen Gino in the distance with a gentleman, his father, and her heart nearly stood still. She hurriedly hid her face in her hand, and she had not noticed her, and she was glad that he had not stopped to speak to her.

As she stepped into San Marco she told Giovanni where to wait for her, and he returned to the gondola. She had not seen her, but he had exchanged a sign with some one in the distance.

The mass began, and she became completely absorbed in the service. She recalled to herself by the close vicinity of some one, who seemed to protect her from the crowd. She did not look up. She knew it was Gino, and a sudden calm came to her. Her eyes became lost to all but the pleasure of knowing that he was there.

Mass was over. People hurried to get home. It was bitter cold. Angelina stepped out into the air, and she suddenly gazed at her hand. Drawing it through his arm he led her to a gondola. No word was spoken until Angelina found herself tucked under the cover. She said: "Gino, my dear, you must go to your mother. I have to-morrow to be happy."

"I shall go to my mother, darling, never fear. And now tell me about yourself. It is so good that you came!" She told him of her home-longing and of her sudden decision, her journey, and then of the nice old lady, who she said: "Gino, my dear, you must go to your mother. I have to-morrow to be happy."

"Here she is mother dear!" he says at last, "tell her that we may be happy."

Agelina stands in a beautiful parlor, trembling before an old lady in an arm-chair. She sees a hand stretched in welcome, and hears the words: "My daughter."

"She kneels at the feet of the dear old lady, and all she says is: 'Oh, I have so wished that you might be my mother since yesterday.'"

For she is indeed the marchesa. She cannot rise, she cannot extend both hands, but her eyes tell of the love she has in her heart for the chosen wife of her son.

"You shall never be alone again at Christmas, my daughter. Make me Gino happy!"

"Ah, have you no word for your father, my child?" says another voice, and again Angelina is held by the encircling arms of Gino's father.

Christmas celebration. Angelina has quite forgotten that she was ever angry with him.

ALWAYS COOL IN A CRISIS. Census Agent Stone's Request for Advice When His Steam Boat Aways.

There is one of the employees in the census bureau in Washington who is regarded by the Washington Post as the most masterful of men in the government service. One would scarcely call him a hero in the usual sense of the term, but he evidently has his own way of doing things as heroes are made, and there are occasions when he would probably rise to the point of the sublime, though, truth to say, he has not attempted to take a phlegm is of the Teutonic variety, such as would lead him to continue the careful indexing of his field notes in the midst of a shipwreck or a boiler explosion, and if there should ever be an earthquake or a collapse of the building in which he was working he would be likely as not to remain in his chair, while the others were going through and ask some of his fellow workers to hand him a ruler or shove the paper weights to keep his notes from blowing away.

The patients are also divided into three classes. Five rubles for the patients of the first class, three rubles for those of the second and thirty kopeks for people of the third class.

After the Doctors. The Russian government, in order to prevent the abuses caused by physicians' bills, has just published a regulation fixing the fees to be claimed by doctors. The cities are divided into three classes, the first, including more than 50,000 inhabitants, those having from 5000 to 50,000 inhabitants and those of less than 5000.

A Deaf Mute Club. (Chicago has a deaf-mute club, the "Paw-law," and a few days ago it gave its fourth annual hop. There was a large attendance of mutes from the city and the country about, the conversation was especially animated, though mostly conducted without words. His Wife Promoted Him. Leavenworth, Kan., is interestedly discussing the latest developments of the women's rights movement which it has in its midst. Mrs. George Blackman has managed to get the position of secretary of the Leavenworth board of police commissioners, and is a capable woman, but her husband is a nobody, and has managed to get a position as sergeant of police under a commission signed by his wife. She made a place for him by discharging the incumbent of the office, and in a few days she was promoted to sergeant of police.

The Big Pulley. The giant of the pulley family is now doing service at the Willamette thread mills. Willamette Manufacturing company has purchased a monster wheel is twenty-eight feet in diameter and weighs seventy tons. The face of the wheel, which is made for a series of pulleys, is made of cast iron, and is six feet across. It is cast in twenty-six parts, including the hub. The metal in the spokes alone weighs 36,000 pounds and that in the rim, which is made of cast iron, weighs 100,000 pounds. The twenty-six pieces of this gigantic piece of mechanism are fastened together with 160 bolts of varying length and size.

Twenty Female Heroes. There are now twenty women members of the British Medical Association, all of whom are fully qualified medical practitioners. At the last annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science it was decided that the medical section of the society should be thrown open to female members. This resolution was seconded by Mrs. Garrett Anderson, who was herself a member before 1876.

Photography. The difference between the so-called "artistic" focus and the "scientific" focus of a telescope may be little or it may be half an inch. In either case the photographed image will be decidedly out of focus if allowance for this difference be not carefully made.

Found by a Peasant. The statue of Venus de Milo, regarded as the type of perfect womanly beauty, was found at Milo, one of the islands of the Grecian archipelago, by a peasant while digging at the roots of a tree.

Whalebone from Hilo. A process of forming artificial whalebone from animal hair, consists in subjecting the hair to a softening process, and then to a solution of caustic soda, and finally, placing the mass under great pressure, has been invented.

The Popular Song. "How do you know that new song of yours will become popular?" "Because I took out into the kitchen and tried it. It harmonized perfectly with the rattle of the dishes."

The Proof Not Wanting. The Judge—You say you are a quiet, peaceable, easy-going citizen and avoid contention of all kinds. The Witness—Yes, your honor. The Judge—What do you say to this, officer? "It is quite true, your honor, and as a proof, I can testify that he is passionately devoted to the game of cricket."

A Useful Adjoint. Guest, tenth story—Porter, what's this rope coiled up in the corner for? Hotel Porter—That's 'ol' use in case of fire. Guest, after a look out of the window to the sidewalk—Oh, I see. Very convenient. If a man objects to being burned to death he can hang himself.—Judge.

Some Very Ancient Books are to be found in the sacred relics of Coeyon. They are formed of palm leaves, written upon with a metal pen, and are bound merely by a silken string.

Whistling Fireworks. The people of London are very much interested in the whistling fireworks which have long ceased to be regarded over here as a pyrotechnic marvel. The popular notion among the Britons is that gas generated by the combustion of the fiery composition actually blows a whistle, but this supposition is erroneous. So far as can be determined by the pyrotechnists, the noise is caused by the escape of the gas through the narrow tubes of the fireworks as they are stuffed. Experiments have been made with other materials, but the escape of gas is the only combustible substance discoverable that will give anything more than a faint imitation of a whistle.

Maritime Velocipede. A maritime velocipede is the latest mechanical invention reported from Chile. A citizen of that country, Don Anselmo Santa Maria, has constructed a velocipede destined to run in water in the same manner as it would be used on land. The new velocipede was on exhibition at Valparaiso, and the first experiment was made in the bay of that seaport at the end of December, in the presence of a large number of people. The machine was started from the pier, and in the direction of the docks, and it returned safely to the pier. The stability was sufficient, but it did not develop much speed, and some improvement will have to be made in that regard. The machine is simple; it consists of two tubes, with compartments and cigar-shaped bows. The rider sits on a framework resting on these tubes, with the wheel in the middle.

Must Feel Their Ornaments. It is getting to be quite a common thing in New York for ladies to wear chameleons and other small birds crouched on their persons by tiny gold chains as ornaments, and the society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has taken a hand in it so that these little pets are not abused. The superintendent of the society has issued orders to all his men to stop all ladies seen on the streets with such ornaments and remind them that their pets need food occasionally. Right now the agents were busy on Broadway the other morning. Many of the ladies took umbrage at the interference of the officers in their private affairs and told them to attend to their own business, but the most of those accosted took it in good part and said that they would look carefully after the wants of their living jewelry.

Child Marriages. The historical manuscript commission has recently printed the diary of the Earl of Anglesey, a man of "grave deportment" and high office under Charles II, who writes under May 20, 1672: "This morning about 10 o'clock at Lambeth, the Archbishop of Canterbury married my grandson, John, about 15 years old, to Mrs. Catherine Fitzgerald, his cousin grand-mother, about 13 year of age. I gave her in the chapel there, and they appeared as well as those of greater age. The wedding dinner and supper I gave them, and the rest of the day till 12 at night was spent in dancing, etc. They lay in my house. I did not attend at the altar, but I was very wonderful how correct the dancing was."

Life or Death? It is of vital importance that it should be understood by persons whose kidneys are in such a condition that they are finally unable to excrete the waste matter of the body in the balance. Bright's disease debilitates a man's system, and all have fatal tendencies. They often battle the most practiced medical skill, and the most approved remedies of modern medicine, but without success. This monster wheel is twenty-eight feet in diameter and weighs seventy tons. The face of the wheel, which is made for a series of pulleys, is made of cast iron, and is six feet across. There are more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years, suppose it was incurable. A great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proved Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Write for circulars and testimonials. Address: J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, etc.
