LETTER FROM OUR OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.
New York, April 17, '68.
I once again take my pen to hand, and gliding over the turbid waters of the grand old Mississippi, to write you a few additional lines. Remaining in New Orleans over Sunday, resting after the weary trip of the past week, on Monday at 5 o'clock P. M. I went on board of the steamer "Alice Deas," for Cincinnati, and seating myself upon the upper deck surveyed the scene presented to view upon the "levees," I can imagine no more exciting panorama than was here spread out before me; thousands of bales of cotton, with their little flags attached, denoting to what lot or firm they belonged, hundreds of busy men, of all colors, rushing about as if their very life depended upon it, huge drays with their loads for the departing boats slowly working their way through the throng, the drivers shouting to clear the way; and now as a clock approaches, the noise and rush increases, the boats ting their bells and blow their whistles, the mate shouts "all aboard," and then the noble steamer "Dexter" that lay above us, and which was the first to depart, slowly and majestically backed out into the stream, until finally getting plenty of searoom, she forged ahead, her crew of jolly blacks assembling on the bow, and while one moved a gaidoo, the rest broke out with a loud and thrilling chorus, the passengers waving their handkerchiefs and shouting last farewell to friends left behind as they steamed away from the Crescent City, bound for the land of the yankees. I noticed on board of this boat Colonel Morris of the 6th United States Cavalry and Lieutenant Wolfe, of the 8th United States Infantry, shortly after our boat backed out our "Calliope," playing "Home Sweet Home," "Gloria," "I Left Behind Me," &c., &c., while "A hundred voices rent the sky, Shouting to their friends good bye;
As the vessel sailed away, Kissed the waves with laughing mien." Selling up the river its and even to see what the ruthless hand of war had done, to see the ruined plantations, to gaze upon the tall chimneys, all that is now left to tell where once was the dwelling of the prosperous planter, or where had been the sugar house in days of yore, these chimneys are indeed monuments of departed prosperity; most of the cabins also seem deserted and its only now and then one sees a woolly head projecting from a window, looking about in a scared, lonely way, as we pass on, he also would like to get away from scenes whose glory has surely departed.
The levees are fields overgrown with a heavy growth of underbrush, and I fear it will be many, many years before the former are rebuilt and the latter replanted, and again under cultivation.

On Tuesday night, the 14th, we experienced a severe storm, the wind blew terribly and the rain fell in torrents, and we were obliged to lie up, for the space of three hours. Upon arriving at Vicksburg we found the steamer "Lexington" there, disabled by the storm, the wind had blown her smoke stacks down, knocking the Captain overboard, but he fortunately made a landing and escaped with a good ducking, she also lost a portion of her upper cabin or "Texas" as it is called.
At Napoleon near the mouth of the Arkansas, we found the river had made a raid upon the town, and from general appearances, I should say that the place was about gone up or rather about to go under. The Marine Hospital, a fine building located here, and which used to stand a long ways from the river banks, is now undermined and a portion of it has already fallen; I noticed some men at work tearing down the dome, in a few weeks it will have entirely disappeared, as the river is steadily encroaching upon it. I was told by a person who passed down here about three weeks ago, that the river had washed away at least fifty feet of the bank since that time.
At Vicksburg I found this place had suffered since I passed it.

Only a Nigger—Confederate Civilization.
The Texas Vindicator, a Union paper published in Paris Lamar county, Texas, relates the circumstances of a savage scene, enacted upon the public streets of Paris, at mid-day, a couple of weeks since. A rebel ruffian named Dan Franklin rode up to a group of freedmen who stood his pistol on the firestone water-tower, and Franklin took after one of them, chasing him from one street to another, and shooting at his unarmed victim. The Vindicator describes the scene thus:
The negro he was after took flight toward a crowd of men who were standing on the pavement in front of Dyer's store. Many in the crowd, finding out that the object was only to kill a "damn nigger," cheered Dan on by yelling—"Set him up," "Here he goes," &c.
The negro, we understood, used to get into various houses but was thrust back, and kept on to the North west corner of the square, then went to the rear of Mc-Murray's store, then along the rear of the block of stores on the west side of the square, emerging on the plaza near where he started. As soon as the crowd got sight of him again, a score of voices hollered: "Here he is," "Shoot him!" etc. Back came Dan at a brisk trot, when the negro skeddaddled across the corner of the square into the front door of the store of E. G. S. Wells. Dan spurred his horse at a swift canter, hopped to the back door of said store, and fired two shots at the freedmen after he came out. The negro, whose name was Green, continued to rely upon his pedestals, and succeeded in eluding his pursuer by taking refuge in Franklin's stable lot.
Dan was evidently regarded by many as a hero, and the negro no better than a mad dog. And when the chase was up Dan sat upon his caballo, as upon a warhorse, and from his "throne of glory," said a multitude of admirers, damned and defied the Sheriff and his posse. Upon his departure his health was drunk again and again, and for an hour afterward the plaza resounded with boisterous hal-lal and roars of delight. The whole affair was characterized by blood freezing brutality!

Who will be so bold as to declare that peace, law, order, and loyalty do not reign in Texas?
In Stamford, Ct., several Roman Catholic priests have been holding protracted temperance meetings, and as a consequence, two hundred men and women have signed the pledge, and five liquor sellers have closed their shops.
Sixty Hartford teachers are now at work taking drawing lessons, the city government having decided to introduce drawing as a necessary branch of study in the public schools.
Reading matter on every page.

three years ago, here we struck up the Ohio and after steaming up it several days at last reached Cincinnati, the 9th day out from New Orleans, taking the Pan Handle route, which is the most popular and by far the safest route East, in thirty-six hours I found myself in New York. The scene in crossing the Alle-ghany mountains is grand and beautiful, and inspires one with a feeling of awe and admiration. Admiration at the skill and energy displayed in constructing a railroad across such lofty mountains, and awe, when one reflects what would be the probable consequences, if in making one of these short carves, where the cars seem to hang, suspended in the air over precipices whose depths make one dizzy to look at, they should happen to plunge ever. Where a person looks at the almost insurmountable difficulties that have been overcome upon this route, and thinks of the immense cost of constructing a road over such a country, and then when he reflects upon the comparative ease with which one could be constructed in Texas, and how few natural obstacles there would be to overcome, he cannot but be astonished at the few miles of road now in operation in our fair State, but it is to be hoped that our people will soon awake to the importance of railroads and that ere many years, the sound of the approaching trains will greet the ears of the San Antonians daily, if not hourly, for in this lies the prosperity of Western Texas.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Senate.—The Judiciary Committee reported without amendment the House bill admitting Arkansas.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—The Court of Impeachment opened at 12 o'clock, all the Senators being present.

The Republican Senators who voted against calling the 11th article first were Fessenden, Fowler, Henderson, Ross, Trumbull, Van Winkle and Willey.

Chief Justice Chase, after admonishing the people to keep quiet, ordered the Clerk to read the 11th article, when the questions were propounded to each Senator.

Mr. Chase said he would not announce the vote until it had been taken on all the articles, unless the Senate ordered otherwise.

Mr. Henderson said that the motion was not in order while the roll was pending.

Mr. Chase announced the result of the roll, which, being read, Justice stated that there were 35 votes for "guilty," and 19 for "not guilty," and that the President was therefore acquitted on the 11th article.

Mr. Chase then stated that the Senate was now in process of carrying out the order to proceed to vote on the articles of impeachment, and no motion was now in order while that was proceeding.

Mr. Corwin appealed from the ruling of the Chief Justice, and the appeal was sustained by a vote of 30 to 24.

The motion to adjourn until the 20th was carried by a vote of 32 to 21.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Upon the adjournment of the Impeachment Court, Mr. Wade resumed the chair, and, after a long debate, a joint resolution adjourning to the 25th was negotiated and the Senate adjourned as usual.

thousand dollars; for the year, one hundred and sixty-six million.

NEW YORK BANK STATEMENT. New York, May 16.—Increased loans, one million nine hundred and sixty-eight thousand; deposits, two million thirty-six thousand; legal tenders, $710,000 decrease; specie, $946,000; circulation, $12,000.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Impeachment. WASHINGTON, May 16.—The excitement to-day is too great for wild demonstrations, but the feeling is intense. The President was surrounded by his Cabinet officers when the vote on the 11th article was announced by telegraph.

Upon the announcement of the postponement to the 26th, the party at the White House dispersed.

There was an unusual large crowd gathered at White House grounds to hear the band which plays there every Saturday; the President occupied his usual position on such occasions. There was no demonstration.

The Republican Senators who voted for acquittal have been subject to no annoyance.

Much money changed hands on the eleventh article, and immense sums remain in the hands of stake-holders waiting the final result.

The House resolutions setting impeachment managers to work again, has the following preamble: "Whereas information has come to the managers which seems to them to furnish probable cause to believe that improper and corrupt influences have been used to influence the decision of the Senators upon the articles of impeachment exhibited to the Senate by the House of Representatives against the President of the United States."

WASHINGTON, May 17.—The statement that Chase paid a congratulatory visit to Johnson, yesterday, is untrue.

Salutes in honor of acquittal were fired in several Northern towns.

A very doubtful rumor has it that General Grant has written a letter declining the nomination unless the platform confers in his view, creates some excitement.

SAVANNAH, May 17.—From reliable authority it is now understood that the Georgia Legislature will be composed of three parties, Democrat, Radical, and Conservative independent, the latter hold the balance of power and their proclivities so far are decidedly democratic.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—In the Senate yesterday, Senator Nye said: "Let Arkansas come in to-day; let us have a birth with a death; let us pass a concurrent resolution and not send it to him at all to have it sent back here at the end of ten days, with a note, here defined as a veto. We have had enough of them. Let us admit Arkansas before the sun is down, and let the President have another sweet morsel to roll under his tongue."

This morning's Chronicle says the House of Representatives should prepare forthwith, a new article of impeachment, and arrange the Presidential culprit at once, and the Senate, as now constituted, after the admission of the Southern States, should take sharp and decisive action upon it.

It is stated that a Cabinet change is pending, and the assurance is given that the new Cabinet will tend to harmonize Congress and the President will cease to obstruct reconstruction.

Gen. Breckenridge has returned from the Holy Land and was to have left for Quebec on the 19th inst.

THE GRAVES AT ANDERSON. From the Boston Transcript: About 1,000 yards north-west, in which railroad station, is the cemetery. The first 300 were buried in coffins; 170 and 900 were covered with boxes 12, 12, 12; the bodies were buried in three feet shoulder in trenches about 12, 12, 12 deep and six feet wide.
