REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

CHARGE OF TIME ORDERED.

A Deliberate Convention of the Republican party of Texas is likely called to assemble in the city of Houston on the second Tuesday of May, 1872, for the purpose of nominating General Elbridge A. Gridley, Acting Delegate to the National Convention, for a thorough reorganization of our party, and to consider what may properly come before the body.

The object of expense is to secure the services of the Legislature, and the present appearance of the Legislature under the present appointment.

The Labor Reform Movement.

The N. Y. Sun is speaking of the result of the New Hampshire election, unwillingly calls the "labor reform" party which succeeded in electing two members to the legislature of that State, the "mercenary labor party"—and that is just exactly what it is. It is manipulated by a set of mercenary wadeo politicians who are too lazy to work for a living. They are doing their utmost to wedge the so-called laboring classes all over the country into a separate political organization not for any benefit; the laborers themselves may derive from the movement, but in order that they themselves may sell out, the number of votes they are supposed to be able to control to the highest bidder. These demagogues have one of two objective points in view—they say give us your money or give us offfice. It matters little to them which they get, because they mean to steal the money they are in need of if they succeed in getting the office. They will nowhere succeed to any extent, because the real laboring classes in this country are too intelligent to be used in any such game.

There is a good deal of nonsense in this talk about the rights of labor. An effort, for instance, to make the printers in the Express office believe that they do more work than the editor who furnishes them copy, would cause them to laugh at you. They know that he earns his money with quite as much labor as they, although they do not, perhaps, know how much more exhausting is his class of labor—it being a continual strain upon his mental as well as his physical power. We have always had to do with men who worked for a living, and none others, and we never knew a real, genuine laborer—laborer man—who could be deceived by worthless, vagabond handicappers of the "strike" sort.

Budding Agrico.

In last Sunday's issue we gave some facts concerning Buddhism, which a number of readers have spoken of as quite new to them; and so interesting. Professor Max Miller in his late work entitled the "Science of Religion" gives numerous extracts from the Buddhist canonical book called "Buddha's path of virtue," which consists of 423 verses. An example of the verses taken at random is as follows:

"Religion is the path of immortality, thoughtlessness, the path of death. Those who die do not die, those who are thoughts are not dead."

Here is another:

"The thoughtful man, even if he recites a large portion of the law, but is not a doer, has no share in the priesthood. He who does not do, but only thinks, is not a doer."

These examples are sufficient to show that an undeniably sound wisdom is to be gathered from this fragment of Buddhist scripture.

WET AND DRY.

A garrison's story is like chicken pie, it contains many loops and turns.

None wants to know if death's door is opened with a skeleton key.

The Carolina social people are somewhat inclined to play the "old maid" and a "widow" to their husbands.

"I am a widow, but I am still a virgin," said a loving mother to her little boy, "but I am still a widow." "I am a widow, but I am still a virgin," said a boy to his mother.

"It would be nice to have all the old men in the world to be widowers," said a boy to his mother.
