SQUEE SEA BURBLES. An August in the highlands is a chilly shadow of my lands; Oh! for an hour of the ferven't heat That nurses the South Sea Islands.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, SUNDAY, APRIL 21, 1872,

The century plant gross old, and dies. In the prime of a South Ses summe

When smuggling bees hum over Their honey in the clover, I think of the honey-beds I know, And storm like a South Sea rover.

When the winds begin to mutter, My heart is is a flutter; For I dream of foam and roaring reet, And a rakish South Sea cutter. In spite of all endcavor Her straining low lines sever; A crash, a wreck, and a watery grave— Or a South Sea home forever!

I long for a palm thatch cover, Where chattering parrots hover I hate these dreary fields and folk, And sigh for a South Sea lover.

At the glow of sandy reaches, How all my sout beseeches One glimpse of the far off blue, blue wave That laps on the South Sea beaches! For my heart is fall of trouble;

Of cares on cares that double; And out of the core of a citron ge I blow me a South Sea bubble! Botty Varden.

Every now and then a whim eizes the public, and takes posses sion of people's senses, though why or wherefore, it would be hard to say; but when once it has got a fair hold, it has to be humored un-til it is worn out or supplanted by some other novelty. At the pres-moment the name which predominates everywhere, which is adver tised in the papers, posted on walls in bills in large block type, stuck up in the windows of dry goods stores, and heard in everybod's mouth, is that of Dolly Varden, the sprightly coquettish heroine of Dickens' his torical novel, "Barnaby Rudge," But the novel, "Barnaby Rudge,"

True love came to me one golden-day— Smiling I let it go.

The morning hour was awart and cost Flud no thirst when my cup brimmed. Carcless I put it by.
Lades boughs were over my head-clusters golden, purple and red;
Summer's goises all routed as spread?
Yet nothing held my eye.

But when the sun and to blazes, Crimson glories certained the west— What litter thirst was mine! I seek in vain through hours of night What came to me with the morning light; Long, long weeping has b'inded my sight— I mourn my lost sunshine.
