THE PALCHEMO BRVE 3Y.

The waning moon shines pale and still;
The winds in resset beauches die;
Day fainte upon the darkening hill,
And malts into the days gone by.

The vanished days? now dim and far, Yes none so dead they cannot wake And stir in me, se yen high star Quivers, deep-visioned, in the lake.

They glimmer down the moon's long ber They reatle in the resset tree; They fade in twilight's melting dream, and slide in starlight down to use.

I feet the hush of breeding wings,
The warmth of tender loys far flown,
And little flights and flutterings
Of blussings that were once my own.

But O most aweet, and O most and, Of all these less delights that thrill! The blessings that I almost had, But life can never more fulfil. And yet 'tis strange, but these are met My own, te-night, then all beside— Glad stars upon a distant shore, That draw my salls scross the tide.

The Post Office Department.

The Philadelphia North American, in an article on the postal service,

"The deficit which was $7,000,000 in 1859, and which disappeared entirely during the war, reappeared in its old proportions so soon as the South was restored, but in 1871 had been reduced to $3,053,000, showing that some decided progress has been made by the Department at the South, owing to the extension of the railway system and the genthis has been done during Grant's administration, for in 1868—the last year of Johnson—the deficit was nearly as large as in 1859. It is probable that much of this defi-FACTORY, cit was owing to the fact that the free-delivery system by carriers had been very expensive, but had not yet begun to produce its natural result in increased business. To the South it was entirely new. Much more of the reduction, however, is owing to the severe economy and close management introduced under Grant. "The abolition of the franking privilege, which was made a party issue by the Philadelphia platform, would heavily reduce the deficit, and be a measure of decided conomy. This measure was adopted in England cotemporaneously with cheap postage, and was largely influential in rendering the change profitable there. To us, with our long lines of railway and thousands lines of railway and thousands of offices in remote districts, where it is almost impossible to build up a earth. Nowhere else are seen such it is almost impossible to build up a paying business, the vast masses of free matter sent through the mails are enormously expensive. The reformation of this abuse has often been urged by the Postmaster Goneral, and has repeatedly passed one-branch of Congress and failed in the other. Being now made a par-ty issue it will no doubt be passed into a law at the ensuing session This Pales Cry or appreciation in

They are all, from the highest officer to the humblest private, amenable and subservient to the civil law. They have arrested no citizen without due process of civil law. They do not sob, or steel, or insult, or in any possible way futer-fere with any man. Who that desires peace and prosperity would desires peace and prosperity would desire to see them leave we exposed to the vengeance of the hurderous villains who, but for their presence, would to day have possession of the State? If this question were submitted to a vote of the white people of the State, we are confident that if they could vote according to their own judgment, it would be overwhelmingly to keep these peacemakers in our midst. Hesides, no man, of all the thomands of no man, of all the thousands of members of the Ku-Klux Klan in the State, has been executed for the hundreds of shocking crimes of that order. Nor has anyone been tried under the Ku Kiux law. All the cases, if we are correctly intormed, were tried under the Enforcement set of 1870, and of the sighty. It was an office seeker. English Children. The new-born English aristocrat receives as soon as born a little bed with a hard mattrass. From its earliest age it is taken, warmly wrapped, into the fresh air. After the first year its meals are reduced to three, and this rule is so un-changeable that no child thinks of requiring anything more; and from this time its food is of rich milk, and bread and butter, and good meat. After breakfast, it remains several hours in the open air, and then sleeps. The whole afternoon is passed outside. From earliest childhood the children of the aris childhood the children of the arise tocracy wear short sleeves, and often the knee is left bare, though the extremities are clothed in the warmest manner. At five years of age they begin to dance. Never are English children instructed to the care of a young nursery maid, but to an elderly experienced person, under whose direction they constantly are. As soon as the young girl goes to school, the care of the head and anothers becomes an object of attention, and becomes an object of attention, and under no circumstances is she permitted to sit otherwise than up-right. "My child grows but once," says an English mother, "and there believe, thun my other State, is antirely out of debt, and has a physical development. Everything large cash belance in the large of the la physical development. Everything large cash balance is the Treeselse can be acquired later." An ury. So much for the "Radical English child rises at seven; break thicyes." fasts at eight, dines at one, sups at seven, and at nine o'clock goes to bed. Until twelve years of age they pass the greater part of the day furthe open air, with only about four bours' mental work. The young English aristocratic maiden dines first with her parents wt eighteen years of age, when she leaves school and makes her debut in society. She is fresh and blooming as a rose, with light step and eyes beaming with pleasure and life. Herfrequent augh displays her beautiful teetis, and her hair is rich and abundant. Here, for the first time tashionable Violet displays the fine failness of her contour. London possesse noble museums, galleries of art, and reasures of architecture, but one of he most charming of its sights may be seen on fine afternoons in Hyde. Park-crowds of children merrily

A sight equally interesting may be witnessed after service on Sunday at the Foundling Hospital—several hundred children, ranging from five to thirteen years of age, of the most noble physique and absolutely bewildering beauty. Two of the most wonderful sights of Europe are the children of England and the flowers of Paris. Both apin England. Of course the life of gay society undermines to some ex-tent what the early training has accomplished; but the sensible physical education of the first years leaves permanent effects, and the English woman remains equal to the duties of life and the requirements of wife and mother. If she does not continue perfectly well, she retains enough health to be ever beautiful. One sees in Great Britain ladies of sixty with complexions fairer than those of our roungest maidens, and whose hair, though slightly silvered, is yet abundant and haudsoms. Just as by the Greeks every trouble was taken to reach the highest beauty, so too with the English aristocracy. Many artists who have prigrinaged physical education of the first years Many arcists who have prigrinussed half over the world assure us shat the daughters of Affilian sarpass all there in perfection of physique, Even in Barope the women of the best classes are hot so bealthy as the ment except perhaps in Eng-land. There was, however, one point left in dispute, as is proved. The treaty provided that the boundary should run on the forty ninth parallel to the Straits of Juan de Face, and thence follow the main channel to the oceans In the imperfect knowledge of the country, that was supposed to be sufficiently explicit to prevent all misunder standing. There is evidence from the royal chart, which we shall presently mention more specifically, that the British Government at the time had no thought of disputing the American claim. THE business of this City is growing lively, the most of the caudidates may be seen stirring up the people just as a Chatham street, New York merchant stirs up the passer by. But the mercantile and other businesses seem to us somewhat dull for this season of the year, doubtless owing to the late heavy rains.

An application was made yesterday to the District Court for a mendames to compel the board of appenie and revision to register an applicant, to whom registration had been refused by the heard, on the ground, as we understand, that the appli-cant's certificate did not abow that his cartificate of declaration did not show that it had been granted to open sourt. The court granted the mandamus, and as we think correctly; but we are informed that the board will raines to obey the writ, relying upon the following section of the law controlling the action of that
