It selicited a vielt from Jefferson Davis, and listened engarly to his treasonable harrangue. It refused to offer a similar token of respect to the President. It has labored to break my the wiser part of the population, and would entitle the population are often threatened with knives and parton, or are ordered to leve the State by secret associations. In such a community every thing languishes. The credit of the State is depreciated: its railways apply in vain for the aid of Nothern capital; its lands are uncultivated and comparatively worthless. The emigrant shrinks from the dangerous territory, and a scamp population is lost in a wide waste that might under a tolerable government, afford ease and prosperity to millions.

It is probable that nothing but their system of terroism has kept the robel element in power, and the fatal injuries they have inflicted upon the State have already aroused the indigination of the better cortion of its people. A considerable German population which exists in Texas may be belief upon to aid the party of order. The colored votice are one-third of the whole. The Republicans have nominated reputable candidates, and hope to break down shelt rule of terror which has frightened away immigration, and made Texas so long a scene of barbarism and of crime. They are confident of success. Every increbant and every farmer must be anxious to introduce a new policy which will encourage trade instead of driving it

Under a rational and orderly govern-ment it is plain that Texas might become one of the wealthiest and most populous flatter of the Union. At present its popu-lation is only 800,000, thinly scattered over lation is only 800,000, thinly sentered over its vast-territory. Xet it already produces 350,000 bales of cetton annually, and an immiense crop of Indian cern. But the chief wealth of Texas must always he is its great herds of cattle. Its act is hest adapted for grazing, it already supplies the Western States with a large part of their food. Nearly four millions of neat cattle, must over its wide pastages. No their food. Nearly Tour millions of near cattle range over its wide pastares. No other, State can approach it in this par-ticular, and, did it possess a sufficient sys-tem of internal communication, the cattle-of Texas might be made to feed the cities of the North. A large part of tham are now slaughtered for their bides, and many perish on their way to a market. But with proper railway facilities, with the improveproper railway facilities, and the improve-ment of its rivers and harhors, its lands would be trabled in value, and its vast.

This is the policy which the Republican Indicate other to be discharged.
