Hecker in Germany.
Friedrich Hecker, who last spring visited Germany for the two-fold object of recruiting his shattered health and once again visiting the friends and scenes of his youth and early manhood, is about to return to the United States, the land which, as he expresses himself, he became to him "the entrance of freedom, and will now soon become his entrance to everlasting sleep." While in Germany he created an slight stir, and drew down upon himself an small amount of indignation and abuse, by a 4th of July oration, in which, while speaking of the advantages of the United States, he instituted a comparison between our government and people and the German empire, which was the reverse of flattering to the latter. For this he was denounced as an ingrate and no German. To land America, he was told, might have been well enough; but to land America at the expense of Germany—i. e., to institute comparisons between the two countries, and thus by contrast to lighten the effect of the one picture by the dark spots and shadows shown on the other—was a thing not to be endured, and of which he was told no German, even though having his home on the other side of the Atlantic, should be guilty. With the exception of this storm of indignation, raised against him by the newspapers, and a subservient mercenary press, Hecker's reception in the various cities of Germany was most enthusiastic and flattering. Thousands crowded to the railroad stations to greet his arrival, while other thousands lined the streets through which he passed as in triumphal procession, rending the air with their shouts of welcome. He was received and honored as the embodiment of a principle—the principle of German unity and liberty—for which thousands had bled and died, and for which he himself had endured long years of exile in a strange land, where, however, he had found the realization of that liberty and union which he craved for his fatherland. The once hunted and hounded political fugitive was now the returned conquering hero. Measurably, at least, he found, and the German people found, his ideal realized. Germany is united and strong in its unity. The principle at least, for which he had contended in the legislative halls on the field, the principle for which so many of his compatriots had bled, was at least established. In this he rejoiced, and for this the German people honored him as a patriot in the cause. But the work was not yet complete. As in the case of our old confederates, a more perfect union is needed for Germany. In Hecker's view it is not the strong arm of Prussia and the shrewd diplomacy of Bismarck that must be the guarantee of the continued unity of the German empire. He is willing to accept of these as a means to the end. In fact, indeed, the Franco-Prussian war, with all its untold sacrifices of blood and treasure, is welcomed as a means of compelling the German people, in view of common danger, to acknowledge their common origin and a common interest. But this union does not content him. Its foundations are too insecure. A common danger forced, this union, supreme selfishness might again destroy the work. Not by the power of Prussia must the German people be kept together. German unity must be based on the convictions of the German people.

And the united Germany even Hecker wants only as a means to an end. Union without liberty, union merely for the sake of a strong despotism, union only for the aggrandizement of Prussia, Hecker does not believe in choosing for "liberty and union, one and inseparable." In this lesson he has learned from the classic story of ancient Rome, and found illustrated by the history of his new fatherland. The necessity of union to the maintenance of liberty he saw inscribed in letters of blood during the terrible war of the American rebellion, in which he performed a not insignificant part.

To tell the German people that their work was not yet done, that their object was not yet attained, that their union yet lacked the cohesive principle because not a union for liberty, not a union of the German people, but a confederation of German princes and governments, and to urge them to resist the work, to become a free and independent people, is to stimulate a nation of the people and not of the dynasty, was a part of his mission to the German fatherland. That his bold and honest utterances on this subject should raise the ire of the monarchists, that a syndicalist press should pour out the vilest of its wrath upon the sturdy champion of republicanism and democracy, that he, the advocate of the rights of the people against the usurpa-tions of the government, should be vilified and abused, need not be a matter of very great surprise. And it was to this abuse heaped upon him by the press of Germany that Hecker alludes in his large speech at the banquet in the Badener Hof, in the city of Mannheim, of which we give our readers some extracts in this number of the Express. This speech, abounding in passages of glowing eloquence and breathing of liberty in every sentence, shows how deserving the sturdy "Latin farmer" is of the sobriquet of the "Old Roman."

Hecker, we know, has at times been denounced as wrongheaded, petulant, headstrong, and impetuous, and all this may be true, but then his honesty of heart and purpose is beyond all question. He may at times be impracticable, and as Germans are apt to do, he may carry his idealism to an extreme, but he is nevertheless the patriot through and through. Like MARION he is devoted to liberty, and would serve for her, not merely twice sixty years, as did JACOB for RACHEL, but if that were possible, seventy times seven years. He is the honest friend of the people, and of the democracy there. In not a trace in his composition.

Wellcome back, then, to American shores, that sturdy son of freedom, and may thy last declining years be spent in happy tranquility in thy rural Western home, and ere thy sun of life shall set mayest thou be gladdened with the knowledge that thy own well loved Germany is united on the broad and firm foundation of the liberty and equality of the people.—(Continued GAZETTE.)

The News and the San Antonio Railroad Subsidy.
The News has never been on the fence on the subsidy question. We told Mayor Emory, as soon as we read the proposition, that the News would not support it, and stated that the proposition was too vague and indefinite. But we had no wish to attempt to lead or dictate the views of the community in regard to the subsidy. It was a question for consideration by the business men—all those representing the interests of the city. We invited its discussion in our columns, during our full, free and fair comparison of opinions upon it. If it had been apparent that the business community approved the subsidy, and were willing to submit to the tax, it would have gone far to obviate our objections. But the development was rapidly and satisfactorily made that the proposition met with no favorable response whatever by the business community. We have given voice to what we believed their common sentiments.

Justice to the scheme, as it now stands, of still endeavoring to carry the subsidy against the business intelligence and the moral sentiment of the community has not been done. That aspect of the matter is one from which we shall not shrink. The further statement by so-called Col. John S. Trasher, that the News promised to support the subsidy for advertising or for any other considerations, is a most willful and wanton falsehood, and would only have been made by a man who acted as chief fiend for the subsidy, and whose tactics in the adoption of the resolution appointing a committee, and passing the members thereon, became so evident to those present, that it was necessary for Mr. H. O. Street and others to protest against such officious interference. Since so-called Col. John S. Trasher seems to know the market for get it sustained, there is some curiosity, not as to his feeling to be bought, but as to what per cent on $250,000 he could by any contrivance have made himself rich.

An Indian Paw-Waw.
An important conference with the Kiowa and Comanche Indians in Texas takes place Saturday, and unless some compromise is effected, a course will be taken and insisted on by Governor Davis, of Texas, which will place the general government in a very embarrassing position. The United States promised to release Statute and Big Tree if the Indians would comply with certain terms. The Indians accepted, and even went beyond what the Government asked. Gov. Davis was a party to the first arrangements. Now, however, he insists on other guarantees from the Indians, to which it is doubtful if they accede. As the release of the chiefs depends on Gov. Davis, there is considerable anxiety and feeling manifested here at his court, and which anxiety exists at the department in regard to the result of the coming council.—(Washington correspondence St. Louis Democrat.)

Gov. Davis insists on the same guarantee now as he did at first. The assumption that he would release the Indians upon Governor's terms was a mistake made by the United States Government officials. Gov. Davis will have all he asks, and besides will hold Statute and Big Tree as hostages for the good faith of the treaty. His mission will prove to the country that Gov. Davis is the ruderous of hands of unscrupulous averages. The Governor will force the general government to take a different view of our frontier affairs.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS
The startling drawback on nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of preparation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN at once and the same time.
That which has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desire of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills, which purify the blood and remove all impurities and sublimely accommodate the system to the needs of the body, and yet produce no ill effects on the stomach and liver, but on the contrary, during the progress of the liver disease, they assist the liver in its normal functions, and thus restore the system to its normal state. Price 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists. For full particulars, send 10 cent stamp to Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills, 110 Park Row, New York.
