A CHAPTER OF HISTORY.

A letter from Chief-Judge Shea of the marine court is published in the New York Tribune, which gives strong evidence against the theory of a guilty knowledge on the part of Jefferson Davis relating to the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, and also of the alleged cruelties practiced towards the Union soldiers in Confederate prisons.

On June 22, 1865, Mr. Greeley received a letter from Mrs. Jefferson Davis at Savannah, Ga., where she and her family were under military restraint. Mr. Davis was a prisoner at Fortress Monroe, under the conspicuous special charge of guilty knowledge of the assassination of President Lincoln. The letter prayed for a speedy trial upon that and other charges. Mr. Greeley on the next day visited Judge Shea asking him to become professionally interested in behalf of Mr. Davis. Judge Shea consulted with Mr. Henry Wilson, Gov. Andrew Thaddeus Stevens, Gerrit Smith and others, all of whom were impressed with the belief that Mr. Davis did not think of participating in a conspiracy against Mr. Lincoln. The single subject of which they required light was the treatment of Union soldiers while in the hands of the Confederates. At the instances of Mr. Greeley and the others, Judge Shea proceeded to Montreal, where he met Gen. John C. Breckinridge, and there he examined the official archives of the government of the Confederate States. The report showed that the supposed inhuman treatment of captured Confederates by agents of the United States was a prominent and frequent topic all through the South and believed to be trustworthy, and the people of the South, through their representatives at Richmond, constantly pressed upon Mr. Davis active measures of retaliation, to the end that the supposed outrages might be stayed. The same reports showed that Mr. Davis steadily declined to resort to any such measures, and this course, it is said, impaired his personal influence among those who believed the reports to be really true. Mr. Alexander H. Stephens proposed to go to Washington to place the war on a civilized footing and divest it of the savage character which was exhibited by each side against the other. Mr. Davis accepted the proposition, but Mr. Stephens was denied permission to approach Washington, and this mission ended where it began.

Judge Shea submitted this evidence to Messrs. Greeley and Wilson the result of which was that former suspicion changed to a favorable opinion and a friendly disposition. Mr. Greeley urged in the Tribune the immediate trials of Jefferson Davis and Clement C. Clay before a court-martial, and Judge Shea informs us that if the trials had been proceeded with Thaddeus Stevens would have volunteered as counsel for Mr. Clay. Finding no immediate prospect for such a trial, Mr. Davis' counsel asked that he might be liberated on bail, and bondsman, who had been opposed to secession, were readily found in the persons of Mr. Gerrit Smith, Commodore Vanderbilt and Mr. Greeley. "All this," urges Judge Shea, "could not have been accomplished had not those gentlemen and others in sympathy with them been already convinced that those charged against Mr. Davis were unbound in fact." From June 12 to November 9, 1866, Mr. Greeley constantly urged in the columns of the Tribune the justice of trying Mr. Davis on the charges made by the board of military justice, and the government continued to express its inability to proceed with the trial. On May 14, 1867, Mr. Davis was delivered to the civil authorities and admitted to bail. Mr. Greeley and Mr. Gerrit Smith going personally to Richmond as bondsmen, and Commodore Vanderbilt being represented on the bond by his own son in law, Horace F. Clark, and Augustus Law, his friend.

The pith of Judge Shea's argument, and it is unanswerable, is that such men as Andrew, Greeley, Smith and Wilson would never have indorsed the innocence of Jefferson Davis as to the crimes imputed to him, if they had had a doubt of his complicity. The Union feeling was too strong in them.

Judge Shea, in conclusion, refers to an incident connected with Thaddeus Stevens in May 1866. Mr. Stevens said that he had refused to give the charge of assassination against Davis and Clay any support. "These men are no friends of mine," he said, "they are public enemies, and I would treat the South as a conquered country and settle it politically upon the policy best suited to ourselves. But I know that some of the others are gentlemen, and independent judges, and I am saving them." This is an important chapter of history in the light of the reconstruction debate on annexation, and will be read with interest.
