DAILY EXPRESS
CARDINAL HOHENLOHE IN ROME.

Translated from the Rome Democrat from the National Gazette.

To have lived in Rome at the time of the temporal rule of the Pope, furnishes the key to the sensation and curiosity produced by the unexpected return of Cardinal Hohenlohe. To understand the social position of the Cardinal, and the monotonous life of the higher Roman society of the day, which, devoid of all solid refinement and outward authority, supplied the only material for intercourse, which was simply and alone to care for the common relations of life of the spiritual life leads, looking to the discovery and relation of piquant or sensational incidents as their favorite amusement. The political events of the last days have altered the status of things considerably. By the temporal rulers of to-day, the Prelates and Cardinals are pushed into the background, so far, especially as the social life of our neighbor has selected them as the target of their gossip. The foreign Cardinals have never been the objects of great curiosity with the Romans, the proof for which is the perfect indifference with which, even after the fall of the temporal rule of the Pope, the many foreign Cardinals have been treated on their visits to Rome.

Quite different, however, is it with Cardinal Hohenlohe. He is an old Roman. He was known as a Prelate, as the Grand Vicar of the Holy See, as the administrator of the Nine Pines. Afterwards he was Cardinal of the Holy See, which makes a Cardinal's position in Rome of itself. His orthodoxy was without suspicion; his conduct without blemish. His were the amiable forms of a Grand Seigneur, thus contrasting most favorably with that plump, awkward arrogance of many of his spiritual brethren.

Up to the time of the Council nothing special was said of him. Pending it he conducted himself with all prudence, and, although it was notorious that heretics such as Theiner, Hefele, Dollinger, etc., etc., were his friends, they detected nothing deserving of censure. But as soon as the Council was concluded, he was the object of great interest. He now came to be an important personage, a rebel, a Cardinal (D'Audrey), a heretic as Dollinger. The name of Oeston, as the Italians pronounce it, became offensive. Admonished often to return, he did not go. The Papal Nuncio in Munich, had him understood by his black catchpols, and yet could discover nothing. Finally one of his colleagues of the purple found the solution of the enigma: Oeston intends to set himself up as anti-Pope. When Pope Pius IX heard the marvelous story, he was ready to split his sides for laughing.

But when Cardinal Hohenlohe was commissioned as the German Ambassador at the Holy See, the Pope gave him a mission. A Roman Cardinal, the Ambassador of a Protestant Emperor was not a profanation of the sacred purple of Pius IX merely, but for every Italian priest, the name given to a Cardinal's habit at the curia. It was proposed to proceed against Cardinal Hohenlohe, as they once did against Andrea. They spoke of a bull not to be published till the Pope died, which fact would exclude Cardinal Hohenlohe from the conclave. He was to be ecclesiastically censured in other respects. Again, it became quiet. The Pope wished to hear no more of Oeston.

Of a sudden an unexpected report that Cardinal Hohenlohe would return to Rome. It took them by unusual surprise. This much is certain, that they would not give it any credence in the Vatican, until the Nuncio in Vienna would confirm it. Most unreasonable was the presumption that it was the ecclesiastical situation of Germany why the Pope called Cardinal Hohenlohe to Rome. No one, at all acquainted with either Pius IX or Cardinal Antonelli, or the Curia, would for a moment believe any such presumption, or by such device believed to be even with the other, that the German Government had charged Cardinal Hohenlohe with a mission to the Pope. You in Berlin are certainly better informed on this point than I can be, though you may be fully assured that Cardinal Hohenlohe has not been called to Rome either by the Pope or the Curia, and as for ecclesiastical relations in Germany, they think here more of the intelligence and counsel of any German Prelate than of those of Cardinal Hohenlohe. I do not say this to the praise of the Curia, simply merely to establish a fact, and to avert any such presumptions.

The Pope received Cardinal Hohenlohe in a manner due to his rank without witnesses. The audience lasted half an hour, when neither the Pope nor the Cardinal let others understand touching the impression they made on each other. If the reception be said to have been cold, it is an assumption as probable as that the Pope remained for some time in deep meditation after the Cardinal had departed. On the contrary, it is a fact that those Cardinals whom Hohenlohe called appeared considerably embarrassed, not knowing how to treat their old colleague, a sure sign that they had not come to un-stand what had occurred between the Pope and Hohenlohe. Immediately upon these visits, the Cardinal drove to Tivoli, where, in the wonderful Villa d'Este of the late Duke of Modena, he had for some years made his place of residence. Regardless of the act that the Cardinal did not have any other in the city, it was the best way, at any rate, to withdraw from the curiosity of both real and pretended friends, for pending the incident mentioned, visitors are not to be seen in Tivoli.

While there the curiosity of all mightiest approach him, the more inquisitive are the clerical circles here, who, of course, will have it that within the folds of his robe he carries the aspiration of the German Empire. Hohenlohe went to Tivoli because Cardinal Antonelli was disabled by reason of his gout growing worse, to render an expected reply, though there is no question but that any and every proposition of capitulation will finally be, with utmost energy, rejected. For, or then, Emperor William and Bismarck will have to go to Canossa. After that we shall see whether they will take up the subject of capitulation. You may make the comments.

GENERAL BUTLER'S VIEWS ON THE FALLER SECRETARY.

POOL, KNANE OR MARTYR?

LOWELL, Mass., March 8, 1876. General Benjamin F. Butler is not inclined to renounce his entire confidence in the integrity of ex-Secretary of War Belknap until the result of an official investigation has declared him to be corrupt. HIS RECOLLECTIONS ON THE EX-Secretary.

"I am free to state, however," he added, with much warmth, "that my experience with Mr. Belknap was such as to give me the impression that he was one of the most honorable and trusted members in the whole Cabinet. I had considerable intercourse with him while in the army—more than since then—and I always found him a man of strict integrity, and it will be alike a matter of disappointment and regret to me if these charges against him are fully sustained."

Then, after a moment's pause, the General continued, "There are many features in the case, judging from the evidence before the committee, and not from the newspaper accounts, which go to show that Belknap is being HASTILY AND UNJUSTLY JUDGED by the community. You will remember that the testimony goes to show that when money was first begun to be paid to Mrs. Belknap by Marsh there was nothing indicating that it was paid for the corrupt or illegitimate purpose—nothing whatever. There is, though, added the General, "evidence showing that money was paid directly to Belknap himself, but his name appearing receiving it was not such as would be assumed by a disinterested man. He gave his own personal receipt for it, something that a shrewd, corrupt man would never think of doing."

"You mean by that, General," I interrupted, "that he may be more of a fool than a knave?" "No, knave about it, but all fool if he would receive and sign his receipt for money paid for corrupt purposes. Oh, no; it don't seem possible that a man like Belknap would do that. The fact that he signed the receipt would seem to indicate, in my mind, in the absence of contrary proof, that he believed the money was legitimately due to his wife."

"But, General," I now asked, "how do you reconcile his absolute innocence and ignorance with his confession and grief-stricken appearance in the committee's room the other morning?" "Ah! that's it again. You see the newspaper accounts that he confessed, and all that sort of thing; but I fail to find anything of the kind in the evidence that confirms such stories. If it is true, as alleged, that he burst into tears, and implored them to save his wife (who may be guilty) and sacrifice him instead, it shows that there is something compelling in the fellow's character. If he has done that it is not surprising to me; but I am not yet prepared to believe that he consented to all the crimes that are properly charged to him. And another thing," continued the General, "you should bear in mind how Belknap acted in the preliminary stages of the investigation. Didn't Marsh want to leave the country at that time, and especially the bare claim that it had not been for Belknap himself? And didn't Belknap tell him to go before the committee and tell all that was asked of him? Does that look as if the ex-Secretary felt that he had been guilty of a crime, or even convicted of corruption?" Referring again to the matter of the committee, General Butler said: "I have had a good deal of experience, one time and another, with criminals, and I have always observed that a burdened and guilty man stands up boldly and unflinchingly against charges. This is not the case for a man conscious of an innocent crime, who knows that he is liable at any moment to be accused of it; and he nervous himself up to appear innocent and unincriminated when the crisis arrives. Not so, however, with an innocent man, for I have always observed that a guiltless man charged with crime
