TEXAS MISSING AT THE CEN-TENNIAL.

Mr. W. R. Chase, the editor of the Waco Register, has been on a visit to said, as the World does say, that be is a the Centennial at Philadelphia, and man of stainless honor, that his abilities while he found nearly every State and are equal to the place, that his reversee country on earth well represented, he saw no evidence that there was such a State in the Union, or such a region on the globe, as our own beautiful and great State of Texas. Little as may be thought of this now, it will prove the indelible stigma upon the name of every public man of our State who has been responsible for this disgrace upon Texas and this great damage to her reputation, and to all her interests, in the eyes of all the world. We have had competent and laborious Commissioners there from the very beginning who have done all they could for the proper representation of the State, but our miserable State administration has disgraced us in this matter, as well as in nearly everything else. When Gov. Hubbard goes on there to make a speech representing Texas, what can he say in explanation of this very grave dereliction of our State authorities? We think he had better not go, under all the circumstances, though we have no doubt he would do full justice to the occasion. Let Gov. Coke answer for himself in the United States Squate, when he gets there, if he can. Mr. Chase says that even far off Australia is abundantly represented; while Texas is not to be seen. Australia too makes a good showing, as cannot full to be worth thousands and thousands of immigrants to her. Australia is much the Senate almost without opposition, and like Texas in many particulars, and the effect the progress of the leternation it is said, will pass the House without many of the pictures representing Australian all relivoid may have upon the trade of tralia there, and they will be looked at not a few of the lookers will get the impression from them that Australia must be a paradise. recommended the Democratic party to nominate General Winfield Scutt Hancook as their candidate for the Presidency. We then foresaw all the trouble that has since opported from the determination of the politicians of that pasts to nominate one of their own stripe, and from the inevitable and irreconcilable dissensions arising from the currency question. But little attention was then paid to the mention of General Hancock's nave, and what little comment it did cause was rather in criticism or ridicule of his claims and availability. High sounding, but evident ly insincers theories of a President from civil life, to the exclusion of any soldier, were pomposely promulgated, Of course, therefore, after a few fruitions efforts to make an impression as to the eligibility and avaliability of General Hancock as a Democratic Presidential nominee, the Expanses suffered the matter to drop.

But this would not be enough, in view of the exigencies of the coming campaign, to make him completely available as a Presidential candidate for the Democracy The crowning element is found in the relation which he bore to secession and the Confederacy as a leading Union General, and in the fact, as the World puts it, that "his genius as a soldier saved the country in the crisis of two great battles." Thus we have in his name, his tharactes, and his record, all the elements that could be combined to give the nomination of a ocratic candidate the prestige of vic-

With Hancock as the Democratic nomi nee, says the World, all doubts, suspicious and fears as to the atter extinction of the spirit of rebellion and the re-cutablishment of loyalty throughout the land would be scattered like wreaths of vapor on the wind. The election of this great Union soldier would have only one possible meaning. It would be the triumph of nationality. His very name would signify the supremacy of the flag, and any at tempt to question the motives of his candidacy would recoil fatally on its authors The opposition to him would have to seek some other standard than the "bloody
