THE BASTERN WAR.

London, July 17 -The accounts from Jerue about the Terkish was are very confused. Not only do the Turkish and Servian bulletine conflict, but the reports Servian bulletine conflict, but the reports of special correspondents are according to their sympathies and points of observation. The Times this morning has a special from Periaka which says there was no great battle between helim Pashs and the Servian General on Wednesday, while a special dispatch from Vicana to the Telegraph says that Gen Schesginis met a decisive defeat and that it is confirmed that the Pasha has driven him across the river Timek and is advancing into Servia. Gen Schesginis has lost his artillery and Gen Schesginis has lost his artillery and the report is he was killed.

The Daily Telegraph's dispatch from Berlin says the Turks defeated the Servians at Berot on Saturday, and pursued them as hour. They occupied every position they could.

All secounts except the Turkish-official agree to the successful and almost usre-sricted march of the Montenegrins into A TURKISH STORY.

The Turkish troops, Gen Hafyz Pasha in command of the Polonka division, attacked the Servians yesterday. After an engagement lasting six hours our troops captured the entrenchments of the onemy. defeated them completely, and captured a large amount of arms, &c. The Servians retired in a state of den or dization.

This means that Western men are hopeful of building vessels which will be adapted to both fiver and seean pavigation. The St. Louis people have appounced their intention to build vessels which will start from St. Louis and land in Liverpool, with cargo increased at New Orleans, but unbroken here. This scheme has been taken up and discussed in England, with the hope that it may be secomplished, but with little expectation that it will be done.

Custus's personal appearance was singular. Col.
