WASHINGTON.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Washington, Jan 22—In the Senate, during the morning hour, Mr. Morrissan spoke in opposition to sending committees of the Senate away from their duty to take testimony. He said that the result of sending committees away was to deprive States of representation. Recently, the State of Wisconsin was without representation on the floor of the Senate, when questions of great importance were being discussed. Morrissan, of the Louisiana Committee, is examining U. S. Marshal Fritkin, of Louisiana, with closed doors.

FOREIGN.

TURKEY.

London, Jan 22—A Reuter telegram from Constantinople says General Ignatiev declared yesterday, after the Conference, that if the Porte should disregard the armistice or take any action hostile to Montenegro or Serbia, or if the Christian inhabitants of Turkey were subjected to any hardships, Europe would treat such proceedings as a provocation, and would consider that course ought to be followed.

RUSSIA.

Berlin, Jan 22—A correspondent of the Times, telegraphs that Russia is beginning to regret to the Powers that the demands of the Conference having been rejected, it devolves upon Europe to take more forcible proceedings. Should Europe accede to a general armistice, Russia will be able to declare that the defeat of the Conference is the defeat of Europe, not of Russia.

MISSOURI.

St. Louis, Jan 22—A Reuter telegram from St. Louis says that the Missouri Legislature has passed a bill to amend the constitution of that State, so as to give the Governor the right to suspend any member of the Legislature who has been guilty of a crime.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans, Jan 22—Telegraph Manager Barnes returned this morning. It is understood that the largest meeting with Messrs. Barnes, with Cassanova and Kennard, of the Retiring Board.

NEW YORK.

New York, Jan 22—The Great and all other, were severely wounded. The officers had difficulty in quelling the riot.

MELLOW-SOIL AROUND TREES.

Unless the surface of the ground is mellowed around young trees over an area of six or ten feet in diameter, the ground should be kept clean and mellow. Every farmer knows that a bill of corn or potatoes will not amount to much unless cultivated, and yet there are many who will neglect to give the same care to a tree which is worth a hundred bills of either of the former. In rich soil trees may grow rapidly without cultivation, and no amount of grass or weeds will retard them; but there are other things besides growth to be looked after. If the ground and grass are allowed to grow up around the stems of apple, peach or quince trees, the bark will become soft near their base by being shaded, and thereby be in a suitable condition for the reception of the eggs which will eventually become peach or apple borers. Take any dozen young apple trees. In the sections where the apple-borer is abundant, and allow a portion to be choked with weeds and the remainder well cultivated, and then watch the result. It is believed that the chances are nine to one in favor of those cultivated being exempt from this pest.

MILITARY MATTERS.

The General Court Martial instituted at Fort Brown, Texas, per paragraph II, Special Order No. 108, paragraph V, Special Order No. 138, paragraph II, Special Order No. 183, and paragraph III, Special Order No. 199, series of 1875, from Headquarters, and of which Capt. J. W. Clouse, 24th Infantry, is President, will be dissolved upon completion of the case now before it.

TUESDAY MORNING, Jan. 23, 1877.

THE STAGE AND PULPIT.

The Rev. William Alger of New York, who has written the biography of Edwin Forrest, the great American tragedian, claims that the church aims directly to teach and to improve, to persuade and to command. That the theatre aims directly to entertain and indirectly to teach, persuade and improve.

He then proceeds to make a comparison between the black pulpit and the pleasant stage, and remarks that all natural competition of the dry black pulpit with the stage becomes hopeless when the minister sees the intense occasional pleasure and impressions secured for the lessons of the player by the convergent action of the manifold charms of the aesthetic crowd.

In conclusion, the interesting remarks of Mr. Alger claim that virtue is not confined to the varieties of the pulpit, and that it sometimes vies in openly flaunted in the theatres, it is sometimes secretly cherished in the church.

THE RECENT INVESTIGATIONS.

The committees sent by Congress to investigate the political status in the three doubtful States, Florida, South Carolina and Louisiana, have ended their labors with reports in Washington.

South Carolina, it is generally conceded, will be unanimously reported by Congress. In Florida, however, the facts seem favorable to the Democratic claim. Governor Stearns showed no disposition to support the claims of his Democratic opponent, and surrendered the position to him respectfully and without a murmur.

How Democratic STEARNS OVERTERS—Take the glass of liquid, grate, press the liquor—useful for three—in a steap, and add half as much more water, salt, a good bit of pepper, a teaspoonful of rolled crackers for each. Put on the stove and let it boil—have your oysters ready in a bowl. The moment the liquor begins to boil pour in all your oysters, say ten for each person, or six will do. Now watch each person, or six will do. Now watch each person, or six will do.

other mode of teaching. When the drama shall be made in all respects what it ought to be, fulfilling its own proper ideal, it will be beyond comparison the most effective agency in the world for imparting moral instruction and influence.

TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD.

CURIOUS FANCIES CORROBATED THEREWITH—SOME NOTABLE EXAMPLES.

[From Apollon's Journal for December] Truly science has, as was said recently by one of its eminent votaries, "its romantic side." Its history presents not a few deeds of heroism and self-sacrifice; its results have not seldom been attained by suffering voluntarily inflicted, and have now and then cost the lives of willing victims. The young Berlin Doctor, who, when a deadly contagious distemper was ravaging the poorer households of that city, thought he had discovered a method for its cure, and, knowing that its test might be fatal, nevertheless boldly tried it upon himself, and, as he lay dying from its effects, jotted down his observations of its action on his system until within nine minutes of his departure from earth, was a hero to whom Sir Philip Sidney would have done his hat. A deed scarcely less noble, as it involved self-sacrifice, has just been done at Manchester by a young English medical student. It appears that a weakly young man had a leg amputated at the hospital, which made him so feeble that he was not likely to recover. He was fast sinking when the hospital Doctor declared that there was but one possible way of saving him. Into the patient's languid veins must be transfused a quantity of warm blood from a vigorous, living man. A young student, who heard this, at once stepped forward and offered his own blood for the purpose. A pint of the vital fluid was thereupon taken from him, and sent circulating through the arm and the body of the moribund youth. Within two hours he revived, recognized people and was pronounced on the way of recovery.

The young medical student, to whose unselfish heroism this good result was due may possibly have worked even better than he knew. It was long a matter of discussion and doubt whether this operation and transfusion could really be performed so as to transfer the vital vigor of one person to another. It is not all a new idea, indeed, for we read of its having been tried on a certain Pope four centuries ago, three young men being compelled to sacrifice their lives in order that the decrepit pontiff might thus renew his youth; but the experiment failed. The experiment has been tried many times, and in different countries; and for the past half century has been generally admitted by the profession. The difficulty is to successfully effect it; but it is well known that the blood of animals has been again and again transfused to the veins of human beings with the best physical results.

Of course the idea of transfusion gives rise to many amusing fancies. Can you make an old man young, a cross man amiable, a coward brave, a nervous man phlegmatic, by exchanging the vital fluid in the veins? Is there a modicum of sober truth in Edmund About's funny conceit about the "nose of notary"? The blood of lambs is sometimes used in the operation of transfusion; do the doctors find the patients thereafter more lamb-like? How gratifying it would be if, by merely rivivifying the gentle denizen of the pasture, and transferring its blood to mortal veins, we could transform the uncomfortable temperaments around us into perennial docility! We fear, however, that psychological results are not to be attained by this very material process. Very much will be gained, however, if we can restore ruddiness to pallid cheeks and strength to a tottering body; if we can see the consumptive revive under the circulation of healthy blood yielded to him by the self-sacrifice of another, as the fainting vampire revived under the moon's rays; and if the effects of those horrible sudden hemorrhages which end in abrupt death from mere loss of blood can be obviated by a prompt transfusion. It may not be that the fountain of perpetual youth is to be found welling up from the heart of one's neighbor; but the gift of health from one mortal body to another has a certain poetry about it scarcely less pleasing to the fancy than the ancient fable, being significant of human self-sacrifice, a noble emotion in which the ancient fable was missing.

A RUSSIAN PALACE.

The Palace of Peterhof is situated upon an eminence facing bay, and the space between the extensive but rather plain building has been converted into a beautiful park. From the central portion of the palace, a broad, sloping avenue leads down to the beach with a wide stream of water in the middle, rippling over a bed of marble, and a line of splashing fountains on each side for a distance of a mile and a half. At the head of this avenue there is a large circular basin with a group of marble Nereids in the centre, from which several immense columns of water ascend to the height of sixty or seventy feet. Around the basin there are a number of dolphins, dragons and sundew-like monsters, who all send out streams of water, and the whole surrounded by a very pretty fence formed by diagonal slender jets of sparkling liquid crossing each other. The waters had only just been turned on, and the bands of music were tuning their instruments when I entered one of the many of the shady walks which spread out in all directions, and a few turns brought me to a small marble building in Grecian style half hidden by foliage, with a small knot of people lounging about the entrance. A short distance away a groom was leading a white charger up and down. Upon inquiry, I found that the Emperor was in the building, which contains a bath, and that the people were waiting to present to him complaints or petitions. Several old women wanted to have their conscripted soles returned, while others were suing for the pardon of some criminal; and though I had nothing in particular to say to his Majesty, I concluded to stay and have a good look at him. We did not have to wait long. The folding doors opened, and with rapid strides a tall form passed by and had reached the groom with the horse before any of the petitioners could approach him. As he mounted I had a full view of his fair, open countenance. But his steed was a more beautiful object to look upon—the noblest horse I ever saw; of pure Arab blood, milk white, with rosy nostrils, and grace and strength in every move. When his Imperial master, seated himself, the gentle animal turned its head and affectionately attempted to nibble the Emperor's boots, but a single word started him off on a canter, much to the dismay of the petitioners, who endeavored to keep up with him, holding out their papers. The czar shouted back a few words telling them to come to the palace, and disappeared from view. For the sake of the beautiful horse, I was glad to hear that there was a park at Tsarskoe Selo, where a few horses who have carried his Majesty on their backs are kept in idleness and abundance when their time of service has expired; and there is no degradation in store for them to carriage or even cart horse when old age comes on.—San Francisco Chronicle.

BRIDES' WHARF.

The finest underclothing for brides just now consists of simple masses of Valenciennes lace and insertions, sometimes lined with white, pale pink or blue, a delicate pink flannel, exquisitely embroidered in white or in the same color; and drawers are sometimes made of white silk and ruffled with the finest of Valenciennes. But these are not common even for wealthy brides. Linnen, hand-wrought, washing flannel, neatly embroidered, thread hosiery, and a variety of white and colored flannel skirts, the latter trimmed with knive platings for outside wear, next the dress, are usually considered sufficient, the amount of ruffling and needlework being purely matters of taste and price—which fashion only controls so far as to see that those who have a fancy for such things can have all they want. Colored hosiery was considered rather startling at first, but it has become now a recognized fact that the solid brown, inky blue or cardinal red of the platted flannel skirt should be matched by the dark shade of the stockings, and in winter, in gray, cold or snowy weather, it does not seem at all objectionable; on the contrary, rather appropriate.

The Cincinnati Commercial printed an extract from a letter written by a citizen of Denver, Colorado, December 22, in which occurs the following: "I wrote you yesterday about 4 o'clock, when the weather was warm and pleasant, and I now want to take it all back, for about dark it turned cold and began snowing and blowing, and all day the thermometer has been hugging zero. But this morning we had a very remarkable sun snow-shower, or front-shower, with the most singular and beautiful combinations of rainbows ever seen on this continent by the oldest inhabitants, (of Colorado). There were three circles—one large circle, taking in and circling around the entire city, that seemed to be about four miles in diameter, one immediately above the city, with a diameter of just one mile, and one circle around the sun, commencing at the horizon and merely touching the centre ring, with five bright suns located above the inner circle, like the moons of Jupiter. Each ring seemed about ten feet wide, and of the most brilliant rainbow colors. It was a sight never to be forgotten."

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Sore Legs, Wounds, Ulcers, &c. can be cured. The rational treatment is indicated by nature, is to reduce the local inflammation, soothe the neighboring nerves, cool the heated blood, and render the watery chlorous discharge consistent and healthy. Happily, Holloway's Ointment accomplishes these ends with unfailing certainty. 25 cents per box or post.
