The Eyes a Photographic Apparatus

In the report of the Royal Academy in Berlin, Prof. Boll published a discovery made by him of very special scientific interest and of extraordinary significance. Prof. Boll discovered that the retina of all quadrupeds, after having been a while in the dark, of a purple color while having spent a considerable time in daylight sufficiently intense, it is colorless. Prof. Kuehe, having shown by previous experiments the sensitive nature of light and its renovation in the retina of the eye cut out, in consequence of Boll's discovery, now instituted an experiment in order to see whether any image of external objects, cast by the dioptric apparatus of the eye on its background, would be retained. As the common sense of sight is only possible where the bleaching process so to speak, of the interesting objects discovered by Boll, in the microscope and the purple generating activity of the retina epithelium are constantly realized. The manifold experiments made by Kuehe upon the eye of a rabbit, and starting with that presumption, produced highly interesting and satisfactory results. The head and bulb of a colored rabbit were well fixed at a distance of 1.5 millimeter before a quadratic section of 30 centimeter exhibited in a show window, covered five minutes by a black cloth, then exposed for three minutes to the rather cloudy noon-day sky when the animal was headed, the bulb cut out quickly in natrium of sodium light, and at once placed in a solution containing five per cent of alum. Two minutes after the death of the rabbit the other eye was treated as before, the living, without removing it out of the head. When the next morning the retina, now white and tough, had been separated and turned on a beautiful pink background. They presented a bright quadratic image, clear and distinct, perfectly white, and as if drawn with a ruler in the second eye, while that in the other was of a bright pink, and somewhat less acute. Of course, the pictures vanished in proportion as the background, now exposed in daylight, underwent the process of bleaching. The many experiments made by Prof. Kuehe since then, and considerably varied, having met with success in other places, establish beyond a doubt the retention of topographic images to such an extent that they may be observed.

Marriage Etiquette for Widows and Widowers

It is contrary to custom to invite guests to the marriage of a widow. If a widower marries a young girl, the etiquette is the same as that of a first marriage. A widow may marry in the morning early, without show, and has only her witnesses and those of her intended. Her dress must be plain, of quiet color, and the ceremony should be held on leaving church, the bride invites to breakfast the witnesses who have formed the party, but no other guests are invited to this repast. On the fifth day after the marriage, cards are sent bearing the new address to the married pair. A widow never makes wedding calls after remarrying. Those who receive the cards do the visiting. There is a month allowed for the return of the cards, and the visits. When a single lady marries, after having passed the usual age, the ceremony should be simple and unobtrusive. —Demorest's Monthly.

Hayes and the South

The Hon. William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, received, lately, the following letter from a Tennessee Democrat who has for six years held one of the most responsible and honorable offices in the State: "Dear Sir: At some time I would like to see you. I would like to let the president know that there are scores of gratified people in the South who feel gratified beyond expression for the evidence of his good feeling already developed. I would like to write to him, but don't suppose he would ever see the letter. I do not mind the office. I have just honorably relinquished an office to which I had been three times elected by a majority of the Democratic and Republican members of three successive legislatures. I was so pleased with Mr. Hayes' nomination that I publicly invited the delegates to St. Louis to 'make it and come home.' I felt that the South needed four years of peace more than a Democratic president. I never felt that Tilden was the man we ought to have and did not vote for him, because my dislike for his surroundings. I am gratified that so far my belief that the interests of the country called for Hayes' election is justified for the wide course he is pursuing. It would, if redeemed by wise financial measures, seconded and regenerated our country. The people of the North do not know how earnestly the South wants fair treatment and peace. The illiberal course of the republican party in the South by keeping men in place, and arraying the negroes as a race against the native South, has made it simply impossible for a large element here to be anything else but solidly Democratic. It is about equivalent to the ostracism, or has been, to a Republican in the South, and only because the management of that party has been a blunder. The course of that party has forced a large and respectable element in the South to be Democrats. They have repudiated their own principles."

The Magnanimous and wise course President Hayes has entered upon has promised grand results. It will rain, I hope, the bad element of both parties, and draw around us the good men of the whole country. At no time since the war have I felt so sanguine of a better time for our people.

NEWSBOYS' UNION

A Society for Mutual Protection and to Help in Fights.

The newsboys of San Antonio met in convention in the yard back of the Express office last night to devise ways and means for protection in business and battle.

There were present, Charles White, alias Wild Charley; Rudy Henry, alias Shorty; Alex Porter, alias Long Hair; Job White, alias Buffalo Jake; Charles Heiligman, alias Red Cayote; Dick Chambers, alias Buster; and Tom Hanlan, alias Lightning Tom.

Long Hair, who presided, said the newsboys must unite for self protection and swear by all that is good and bad, to stand by each other and rally in each other's aid whenever they come in conflict with bootlickers or anybody else. All swore, and then the following officers were elected.

General, Alex Porter; Colonel, Jacob White; Captain, Rudy Henry; First Lieutenant, Charles White; Second Lieutenant, Charles Heiligman.

Shortly thereafter and said the boys sometimes get skinned up in fights, and medicines were needed, and moved that a medicine fund be created, by an assessment of five cents a week upon the members. This motion was carried, and the city editor of the Express, on further motion, was made an honorary member and custodian of the medicine fund, which was very judicious action on the part of the association.

After informing the treasurer of the honor conferred, and requesting that the proceedings be published, the meeting adjourned.

"Up in a Balloon, Boys."

The Popular Old Song Made Practical in San Antonio.

The adventurous astronaut, Prof. Borchmann, interested a great many people Sunday evening by ascending in a balloon.

We have said that a great many of our people were present, and such was the case. The scene of the ascension was Wolfman's Central Garden, to which an admission fee was charged, and which number paid, but probably a greater hundred thronged the approaching streets and galleries. After several hours of waiting and sleep, "early candle-lighting," the balloon was pronounced inflated, hoisted when up it went several hundred feet, and the damnable Borchmann clinging by one arm, and jolting in cheer with the multitude of spectators he left below. Soaring higher and higher, the balloon followed the course of the wind, southwestwardly, the man of the iron sphere upon the trapeze evincing different gymnastic feats. He soon attained such a height that his form was hardly perceptible—only a small black dot in the blue canopy above. He landed on North Flores street, upon the residence of Mr. E. B. Nicolls, the balloon dematerializing a chimney upon the house. The distance from the place of ascension to that of descent was about a half mile. Considerable dissatisfaction was occasioned by the tardiness of the ascension, which was advertised to tramp up at 4 o'clock, but was deferred until after 5 P. M.

Let the County Commissioners Beware.

We are informed that the County Commissioners will not canvass the returns of the election in this county last Saturday until several days from the election have elapsed. It is understood, from the reports of returns already in, that the property to restrain hogs, sheep and goats from running at large was carried by the vote of the county. We have heard of some bull-dozing or intimidation in connection with the election, and if the County Commissioners, acting as a returning board, allow anything in the result contrary to the report, then the people will be justified in the belief that the hogs, sheep and goats, have exercised an undue, if not unrighteous, influence on the Commissioners. The question now is, as to the liberties of the people and the liberties of the hogs, sheep and goats. If the Commissioners want to consent with the hogs, sheep and goats, we have no doubt the people will not object—after their term of office has expired, when, instead of being servants of the people, they will be at full liberty to show for themselves. However, if after a careful investigation and an honest count, it should be shown that the result is different from what is now expected, then we will cheerfully take back all that has been said in reference to the County Commissioners, hogs, sheep and goats.

Another Jail Delivery.

On two occasions, at least, within the past few weeks, the prisoners confined in the city calaboose have demonstrated the fact that they did not like their quarters by voluntarily leaving them. Sunday the grating of the window of one of the cells was torn out, and seven prisoners confined therein made their escape. At last accounts none of the missing had been captured.

A SUICIDE

Of Morphine, Frank Williams Took Ten Grains.

And then Slept the Sleep of Death.

There was a strange and unusual scene transpiring Sunday night in the small ante-room adjoining the office of the Central Hotel, with a crowd of curious spectators standing around, or peering in through the window and glass doors. On a mattress spread upon the floor, with the many beauty of an Apollo, the form of an Adonis, Frank Williams lay adying.

Frank Williams was pretty well known to our people, he having lived here two or three years. He had been more prominently brought into public notice during the last few months by procuring the indictment of several of our citizens for a violation of the revenue law, and by issuing letters and telegrams to be sent to this city from Austin announcing his death at that place. He was arrested and lodged in jail at Austin for committing a felony in connection with these dispatches, but the matter was adjusted in some manner, and he was released and arrived in this city Friday night last. He was penniless, his clothes were sadly soiled; he was drunk; he was a complete wreck of his former self. All of Friday night he sat in the back room of the "Old Stand" saloon, moodily muttering curses, gnashing his teeth, and apparently nursing some great anger or trouble. He managed to keep drunk all day Saturday and Saturday night, and seemed perfectly reckless. Sunday, however, he became sober, and called on the woman he married not long since. Before going, he told an acquaintance that he would have nothing more to do with her, but wanted to get some letters she had in her possession. The meeting with the woman is reported to have been a stormy one, the woman finally sending for the police and having the house to escape arrest. He then wandered about the streets in an aimless sort of way until about half-past five o'clock, when he visited the Old Stand saloon, and sat down in the back room, for several minutes poring over a letter, which was apparently from some lady. Afterwards folding this letter he placed it in his pocket and started out, asking the bar-keeper to lend him 50 cents, saying he wanted to get his supper. Not getting the money, he again started out, but stopping, drew the letter referred to from his pocket, and taking a taper from the cigar lighter burned the letter, remarking, "I almost forgot that; I don't know how I found upon me." He then went to a neighboring saloon, and pawned his overcoat for fifty cents. A few minutes afterwards we hear of him at Mr. F. Kallinger's drug store, on Military plaza, where he purchased ten grains of Morphine, paying 40 cents for it. As the poison was handed him, he was asked if he knew how to divide it into doses, when he replied, "Yes, I know how I want it." He then proceeded to the Central Hotel.

Arriving at the hotel, Williams, between half-past 6 and 7 o'clock, called Mr. James Courtney into the hall and said to him, "I believe you call yourself a brave man." Courtney made some commonplace reply, when Williams continued, "I will show you one who does not fear death," and taking the small envelope containing the drug from his pocket, he threw the contents, throwing the envelope to the floor with the remark, "that's poison," and then walked to the water cooler and took a drink of water. Thinking it was quinine the man had taken, Courtney remarked, "What kind of a coffin do you want, Frank?" the reply being, "Oh a plain pine box will do me." He then walked into the barber shop adjoining the office, sat down in the barber's chair, and went to sleep.

The terrible reality of Williams' remark flashing upon the minds of those present, medical aid was at once summoned. Dr. C. C. Culp and Herr both lending their assistance, and everything was done by the physicians and others to preserve the life of the unfortunate man, but without avail. The effects of the poison were somewhat checked, but brain fever and a total derangement of the system ensued. The patient was unconscious during the night, but a little before 7 o'clock he revived sufficiently to ask for a drink of water. Soon after this his attendant left him to get some tea for him, and when he returned, all that was left of Frank Williams was mortal.

Williams was a native of Mobile, Ala., and we understand, belonged to a good family. He was possessed of a finished education, good business ability, and when not under the influence of liquor and so disposed, could deport himself as an accomplished gentleman, having a fine flow of language and courtly manners. Disipation and evil associations, however, proved the ruin of Frank Williams, as they will prove the ruin of all who do not resist the temptations.

Judge Cotton held an inquest on the body, a verdict being rendered in accordance with the facts as stated above, after which the remains were turned over to the county authorities for interment.

Among Williams' effects, which were of the most meagre description, no letters or papers were found indicating any cause or intention to commit suicide. He possessed some good letters of recommendation as an engineer and machinist. There was a letter from a young lady in Indiana, a cousin, who referred to relatives living in Kentucky, some cards, receipts and papers of no special interest, two pipes, an ambrotype of a fine looking boy of six or eight years, a lady's locket containing a picture of a young man, and a small pocket diary, all the entries in it having reference to the time in which the owner was a member of the State Rangers, about a year ago.

BARNUM COMING

With the "Greatest Show on Earth."

A circular has been received from Mr. P. T. Barnum announcing that he will visit this section the coming season, with "the greatest show on earth." He declares the great traveling exhibition will consist of by far the largest and best menagerie of wild animals that ever travelled in any country, including a living hippopotamus (which cost $25,000) from the River Nile, and other zoological curiosities—so rare and expensive that no other exhibition in America has them; a large museum of animate and inanimate rarities, curious automata and mechanical novelties, and a national portrait gallery, well calculated to interest, instruct and amuse all classes; a refined and high-toned double-acting circus and hippodrome in which will be introduced many surprising and novel features never before witnessed, including a marvellous opening cavalcade of elephants, camels and other wild animals, with scores of thoroughbred Australian horses and African ponies elegantly caparisoned, knights in gold and silver armor, heralds in rich costumes, and the most beautiful and extraordinary male and female riders in the world.

The great street procession, except any former effort of the kind, and is interspersed with extraordinary features never before witnessed. The immense paraphernalia is transported through the country on a early a hundred patent solid railroad cars belonging to Mr. Barnum.

Spite Work, to say the least.

The good people of Seguin and Luling seem to be displaying a way station. They awake from dreams of the time when their towns were the "end of the track" and boasted variety shows and ten-drink saloons to the block, to a realization of the fact that the trains pass hurriedly by their crowds of people with spare change in their pockets—and then they get mad. It seems that some convention of lunatics who by accident had law-making power in their hands, declared that all railroad trains must stop five minutes at each station. This law was so eminently idiotic, that it has been more honored in the breach than in the observance, but in their rage, about six weeks ago, the authorities of Seguin arrested conductor Davidson, and fined him to the extent of seventy-five dollars for not stopping five minutes—about three or four minutes longer than there was any necessity for—at that place.

Last Saturday, conductor Davidson was again stopped—this time at Luling. One delay and the payment of one fine was sufficient to make the business motronous, and Davidson refused to give bond for his appearance and move his train until he was instructed so to do by telegram from company headquarters. The train bearing the U. S. Mail was delayed for the time stated, and now the officers of the railroad company will see what it will cost the officials of Luling to interfere with the running of trains and stop the United States Mails. The probabilities are that the Luling officials have "put their foot in it."

Railroad Accident.

The locomotive attached to the incoming passenger train, jumped the track at Hamp good station yesterday afternoon, a man being injured by the accident. A locomotive had to be sent from Marion, a distance of thirty-five miles, to assist in getting the other one on the track. The train was delayed about seven hours by the accident.

The Railroad telegraph line is completed to the depot in this city, and the wires put in full operation. The poles are now being placed in position to run the wire to the headquarters at the Menager.
