It is not is now is not some interest and parameters. It is usual, among recent writers, to name "The Cross" and "The Crescent" to distinguish the respective creeds in the present Turco. Russian war. In fact these several symbols plainly mark the Christian and the Ottoman faiths. The question when and why the Ottomans altered the Crescent has been much discussed long before now. It was a slegged that Mohammed broke the disc of the moon and caught half of it falling from sheave. B 1. 87.4 fully warranted caught half of it falling from theav en to his sleave—this is stated in the Koran, and seems to indicate that Mohammed made the young moon a sign of his divine authority. The crescent, or half moon, with the horns turned upward, was a religious symbol, however, long before the Turkish Empire began. It was reported that Sultan Othman, founder of that empire A. D. 1299, dreamed that he saw a crescent. Survey Rechause banker. Amorkeag ... 16 18 Tremont T .. 10 state Cotton Yarn. 29 Alpaca 50.

It has also been alleged that, in 1446, when the Turks took Byzantium, they adopted the crescent standard, which they found there, and which the Janizaries had borne for more than a century Good Fair. borne for more than a century previous. Undoubtedly then the crescent was the emblem of Greece previous to the superiority of the Turkiah rule. Oddly enough at the present day the crescent is to be seen on and in charches in Moscow and other parts of old Russia, generally surmounted by the cross, thus unquestionably marking the Byzantine origin of the Russian Church. In 1801 the Sultan Selim III., having previously presented Lord Nelson with a crescent richly adorned with diamonds, founded the order of the crescent, which, as Mohammedans are not allowed to carry such marks of distinction, has been conferred on Christians alone.
