Matters in Europe Getting All Mixed Up. Speculations Concerning Servia's

Action. Another Victory Claimed for the Montenegrins.

A General Digest of the European News.

PROB ECHOPA

London, June 21. Both parties claim London, June 21.—Both parties claim a victory near Delahaba Saturday. The indications are that the Turks suffered disasters. They certainly fell back to Delahaba, though the battle was fought in the neighborhood of Zeidijan. Russian official dispatches dated ar Mazora say Kars responds feebly to the Russian fire. London, June 21. The Times has this from Cettinge, June 20: Yesterday the Turks occupied the village of Martinitzi, the Montenegrina roturing to the heights above without resistance. To-day the Turks attempted a move toward Damologiade, but were attacked by the united forces. After a desperate struggle of five hours the Turks were driven back to Sprus, abandoning their camp and Daggare to the Montenegrins.

London, June 21.—A Vienna dispatch-last night to the Standard says: Notwith-standing the Servian promise militia to the number of fifteen battalions, have been called out and taken up a position at Negotin. The Servian forces are now cal-culated to be nearly equal in numbers to. Turkish forces at Widdin. Austrian in-tervention in Servia was publicly discuss-ad here teenight as it is expected vertervention in Servia was publicly discussed here toxnight, as it is expected very shortly. Distress in Montenegro is likely to cause an important change in Russian strategy. The Czar is greatly concerned on the fate of Montenegro, whose only chance appears to be in Russias marching across Servia to Novibarbazara. Thence they might fall on Mohemet at Alizard.

A Berlim-dispatch to the Times says:
The Servian government is sending to the Northeastern frontier Servian civilian and military officers conversant with the Northeastern frontier Servian civilian and military officers conversant with the Russian tongue. The opinion is gaining ground that the Russians are no longer averse to crossing the Danshe between Swionoverein and Gadova. It is possible that the Austrian court might be induced to leave eastern Servia to the Russian Court of the Russian Court o was kindly received by the Czar, who listened with great attention to his account of the difficulties in which Servin account of the difficulties in which Servia is placed. The Czar assured Prince Milam that Servia might always reaken on his sympathies. No opportunity seems to have been given Prince Milam to express himself directly, much less to receive any instructions, but according to information reaching me, the opinion of the Czar sud his government still is that Servia should not stir. As for any positive prohibition there can be no

London, June 22... The Fimes correspondent with the Montenegrins, teleographing from Cettinge, June 19, admits that Suleman Pasha occupied the strong position of Planenitza unopposed, owing to the incapacity of Vakovices, the Iusurgent leader, who, after he had decided to no longer oppose the revictualling of Niczi remained faactive satil the Turks enterged that place, instead of providing for the defeated of Planenitza.

A Daily News' Vienna dispatch confirms the report that Russia has invited Austria to make military preparations for the purpose of preventing the Montenegrins from being utterly crosked. The Austrian Foreign Office is not inclined to move in the matter. The correspondent adds: Certain signs in ministerial quarter, point to the probability that the moment is considered close at hand when further inactions us the part of Angstriannight unfavorably prejudice her uture position in connection, with the solution of the Oriental question.

gares and Turks have oppressed its peaceable inhabitants, but this population of Latinized Dacians have always emerged from the deluge in whose waters they seemed to have bad as the assault of Kars under been engulfed, and, thanks, doubt-less, to that more refined culture first taste of fighting. First and which they have inherited from foremost, the signal for the forlorn their ancestors, they have fully justified their old proverb: Romoun no pere! "The Roumain shall not per ish!"

It would scarcely interest my readers were I to enter into the many theories proposed by savans to account for the origin of this Latin race. Be they, as some pretend, exclusively descendants of Latinized Gette and Dacians or does the blood of Trajan's Italian partridges: without a chance of the supports were ready to follow up; so forward we went, under a mashing fire (for the Shekri Sebzians can shoot and no mistake), without a man to back us! And then, when we got to the wall, lo and behold! our ladders were too short, just as it happened at Kars; and does the blood of Trajan's Italian partridges: without a chance of the supports were ready to follow up; so forward we went, under a mashing fire (for the Shekri Sebzians can shoot and no mistake), without a man to back us! And then, when we got to the wall, lo and the proposed by savans to account for the origin of this Latin race. Be they, as some pretent of the shear does the blood of Trajan's Italian partridges; without a chance of colonists predominate among them, doing anything. Our men behaved matters little in this century, but splendidly, I must say; some tried it is certain that this little people has increased in an enormous pro-As late as the seventeenth century the Roumanian language was considered to be merely a dialect, and the Wallachs themselves were obliged to make use of Slavonic in churches and before the courts of law. But at present the Roumanian patriots work actively to the expurgation from their idiom of all Servian words, which existed about in the preportion of one-tenth, and of the rest dropped one by one till there was hardly an officer left. At last we heard the signal or recall, hast we heard the signal or recall, hast we heard the losses, and what not, that they wouldn't retire even when they were ordered, and just then the enemy, seeing how few we were, came rushing out upon us in a body.

They have within the last thirty years discarded the Cyriltan character for the Latin so as to complete the analogy with the idioms of Western Europe, and every year the Roumanian tongue becomes more and more thourough ly Latinized, both in its vocabulary and its syntax. But, curious as the study of Roumain ethnology might be to the linguist, the Roumain peasant, taken in mass, cares little for the details, and, proud of the glory of the ancient conquerors, believes himself the descendant of the naticians of Rome. Many of every year the Roumanian tongue pretty sharp one myself), was just the patricians of Rome. Many of as gently as a mother, and standing astride of him, clubbed his of the Romans, and the national musket and fought the whole eight of the Romans, and the national dance of the caloncharis is almost the exact reproduction of that of the Salian priests. The Wallach delights to speak to his "father" Trajan, to whom he attributes everything grand which he sees in his country, not only in the vestiges of bridges and towers and fortresses, but even those works which other races assign to Fingal or Roland, or to some devine or infernal agency. Many a defile has been cleft by the "sword of Trajan" the avalanche which rolls down from avalanche which rolls down from the summit or the Carpathians is "Trajan's thunder," and even the Milky Way is "Trajan's road." In short the apotheosis has become complete, and as he has chosen the old Emperor as the representative of his patien, the Roumain detive of his nation, the Roumain declines to look upon either Dacians or Getae as his ancestors. There is a well-known story of the fluding upon the battle field of Inkerman of the corpses of an English gnardsman and a Russian grenader, lying breast to breast, each with his bayonet driven to the very shank in his opponent's body.
