break him to 'fly at anybody, and 'to take his death if need be, rather than desert his master.' You procure a promising puppy of vicious strain, and you proceed systematically to tease him. The most effectual plan, would be to bother him at his meals, but that would be a mistake, since it would interfere with his digestion, and consequently with his growth. So you must give him a bone some hours after the regular repast, and then proceed to pretend to take it from him. He will get angry and fly at you. Whereupon, having equipped yourself with the toughest leather gloves, you are to twitch his legs, his tail and his ears, hissing him till he is 'beyond himself with passion.' Having effectually soured his temper so far. him till he is "beyond himself with passion."
Having effectually soured his temper so far, you are to lead him out to a field in leash, and set some stranger to trying similar experiments. This fictions enemy is to blacken his face, to crouch down, etc.; and, as the dog is meant to lay hold of him in a state of incipient insanity, the confederate is strongly recommended to wear his oldest suit of clothes, and pad them, by way of further-protection, with straw. Meantime the growing dog is to be kept in seclusion and teased habitually. The final stage of his education is to take him out by night, to let a daring volunteer glide past an ambush his education is to take him out by night, to let a daring volunteer glide past an ambush by preconcerted arrangement, and then to excite the animal, still holding him by the leash. Should the leash slip or break, the man's position would be awkward. Finally the man is to make a bolt for a tree, when the maddened animal is let loose; the man by that time ought to be safe among the branches, but he is to throw down a dummy presented to the large of the larg

The frame house of one Olenburger, living about fifteen miles from town, was burnt down with all his furniture on Saturday last, while he and family were away. It is supposed to have been done by enemies

While an old lady and her daughter-in-law, Arnst by name, were driving home in a wagon last Monday, the mules took fright and ran away, turning the wagon over and bruising both painfully.

On Monday morning, at fifteen minutes to 7 o'clock, surrounded by only a few friends and his family physician, departed. Irom us our worthy and well-beloved druggist, Paul Hanisch. The departed had resided among us for six or seven years, and during that time, by his many amiable quilities, had drawn around him a large circle of friends. Those who had the pleasure of enjoying an intimate acquaintance with him, loved him most. Although the sadevent had long been expected, it neverates a gloom of sorrow over our chierful town. Though he is gone—to his many sorrowing friends we would say, be of good cheer, it is not so bad after all. He is only gone to Galveston to meet his future happiness. bonansa people of low birth and ausaroom wealth who buy the laces and jewels, which crowned heads deem unnecessarily oostly, who fling money away on articles that are increby high-priced, without regard to taste or fitness. Women of far less wealthy surroundings emburk in the race of extravagant outlay, and acquire a reputation of 'buying only the dearest,"

An instance of this character was related to an Evening News reporter by a lady who had witnessed a curious secue in a fashionable millinery establishment. This lady had gone in with the intention of purchasing a bonnet. Having made a choice of one costing $14, it was being put up for her when a lady, the wife of a merchant, and somewhat noted for her pronounced costumes, entered on the same errand. The whole establishment was ransacked to please her; bonnets and hats from $20 to $50 were rejected as 'rather common," 'cheep materiad,' etc. Finally the milliner exhibited a bounct the exact counterpart of that sold a few moments before for $14, and demanded $75 for it as to the most recherche piece of head gear in the exact but here.

butcher said he could give her a beautiful cut for ten cents a pound, she snapped back: "You ought to know better than think we est ten cent meat." "Oh!" replied the butcher, "we can give you some at eighteen cents," and he has ever since supplied that family with meet at eighteen cents which other people get at ten.

This is a fact. It may be pleasing to remark in this connection that the husband of the lady obtained a settlement with his rectitors a couple of years ago on very casy lerms—about ten cents on the dollar—and is the owner has no further use for them. Ap-
