A secret session was held on the subject and it is understood the committee divides on the bill on the question of whether the books should be given up for examination, and the minority considering that the books are of a private nature, and that the committee had no right to compel their production for public inspection. At the meeting Monday Seward will probably be informed of the action of the committee, but if he still refuses to produce the books, will be reported to the house as in contempt.

The house committee charged with the investigation of the spread of epidemic disease, prepared a bill similar to that reported by the special committee on the subject. Not more than one member is to be appointed from any one state. The bill provides that, during the time when actually engaged in performing his duties, he is to be paid a day and reasonable expenses. The general of the navy are to be members of the board, without additional pay. The duties of the board are to be to advise the president on the introduction of infectious diseases into this country are generally the same. The bill contains a provision that it is unlawful for any vessel engaged in the transportation of goods or persons from any foreign port where any infectious or contagious disease exists to land in the United States, except in accordance with the provisions of this act.
