mother and friends, returning to Texase agains after Lincoin's election. A debroore in the manor born." he finished the most olirs southern sentiments, and was one in the southern confederacy. The number of his regiment has also escaped my memory. He had red hair, florid complexion, about six feet tail, muscular and faset of foot as a deer. After a certain battle in Missouri, (Wilson, acreek, I-think,) in which his regiment was engaged, he wrote home to his mother. "We have had an engagement and routed the enemy, and I took more prisoners than any man in the regiment, because I could run so much fasts, than any of them." But Price was driven out, and Missouri was lost to the confederacy. Some time afterward, the commanding general, at a consultation of cliners, made the announcement that he wished to send a shrewd, energetic man up into Missouri, to look after the interests of the confederacy, they could recommend a man to him, to look after the interests of the confederacy, they could recommend a man to him, but was turroduced, accepted and soft north on his mission. That he digh his duty, and did it well, none deed doubt.

He was captured time and again, but always found some way of escape. In fact it appeared to be almost impossible to health in a prisoner. Several times he was taken as were attack of sickness.
