MAY SPEND $100,000 ON NEW ROAD TO THE CARLSBAD CAVERNS

A highway from the elevator shaft at the Carlsbad Caverns to the main highway to cost over $100,000 is being planned by government officials it was learned at Carlsbad Monday.

Horace M. Albright, director of the National Park Service, has requested the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads to make a final survey of the proposed new road. Three preliminary surveys of the route have already been made by the park service engineers. Should the road be built it was pointed out that the boundaries of the park would not necessarily be changed.

Thomas Boles, superintendent of the Carlsbad Caverns, said he did not know which route would be selected. It is generally believed, however, that the Walnut Canyon route, which was surveyed as a possible route, will not be selected because of the necessity of constructing seven bridges. The most probable route it was said, is eastward along the ridge from the shaft in the general direction of the White Cavern Camp to connect with the highway less than a mile west of the camp. An eighteen mile stretch of highway from Carlsbad toward the caverns will be ended at the White Cavern Camp.

This would leave an unimproved gap of less than a mile between the government road and the camp, and it is believed that the state would agree to a federal aid road project to close the gap. The ridge route engineers said, provides excellent drainage facilities.

The new road would shorten the distance between Carlsbad and the caverns by about four or five miles.

When drop cakes spread out too much in baking the trouble sometimes is that the oven is not hot enough, rather than that the mixture is too soft. Drop cakes bake best on a baking sheet without high sides, or on an inverted pan.

Don't leave any cereal in the house when shutting the house for a vacation, however short. It is better to give away small remnants than to have to combat weevils on your return. Weevils getting into one kind of food may spread to your flour or any other cereal foods not in tight glass or tin containers.

If you want to compare the nutritive quality of one food with that of another, keep the following four points of food value in mind: Consider the protein—how much and what kind the food contains—whether it is "efficient" protein or otherwise. Find how it ranks as a source of vitamins—i. e. which of the recognized vitamins is supplies and which it lacks. Each has a different function. Learn whether it is high or low in calories, which indicate energy or fuel value. Judge it also as a source of iron, calcium and other minerals. Each one of these four points of food value is essential in making a fair estimate of any one food as well as in judging the value of the diet as a whole.

Buttermilk biscuits, mixed, cut out and ready to bake, are now on the market. All the overworked housewife has to do is put 'em in the oven for 10 minutes.

Unless you use glass or wooden rests under the casters or legs, furniture resting on linoleum may leave permanent dents or cut into it.

Sweet cherries are excellent in salad, either mixed with other fruits or as one of the predominant ingredients. Select large firm cherries and pit them. The cavity may be stuffed with cream or cottage cheese and the cherries served on lettuce leaves with any preferred dressing. They are especially good when added to pineapple salad or mixed with fruit salads containing pineapple.

Good posture in garden work corresponds to good posture for in-doors tasks; that is, work close to the ground can be done on a kneeling pad, with the back straight and the shoulders flat; hoeing and raking can be done like mopping or sweeping, keeping the abdomen and hips in correct position and the feet squarely on the ground. Pruning, watering and gathering garden products are, similarly, much less fatiguing if good posture is maintained.

MARKETS

KANSAS CITY, Missouri—Advancing lamb prices alone furnished encouragement to the producer of livestock Tuesday, both cattle and hogs sinking to still lower levels. Prices for fat lambs around the Eleven Market circuit were mostly 25 higher, some points reported values about like Monday. Combined receipts were 55,900, as compared with 66,363 a week ago. Low price records for nearly 20 years were smashed at some points in the market for hogs, declines of 10-35 ruling at the principal mid-western terminals. Arrivals totaled 84,500, compared with 60,085 a week ago. There was no interruption to the downward trend of cattle prices, new low levels being attained at practically all the principal markets. Values were largely 25 under Monday, but a better demand was reported at the decline indicating a fair clearance. South Texas grassers, however, continued to be neglected at some of the trade centers. Arrivals aggregated 33,600, compared with 32,209 a week ago.

TREES RECORDING DROUTH PERIODS

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Trees in the drouth area are recording the slump in rain as clearly as down-dipping graphs of sales reveal the slump in business.
Trees are not growing any better than crops this year where the drouth has hit, says the U. S. Forest Service. Whole forests are being delayed a year or two in reaching the size at which they can be cut into logs.

The "inside story" of how the drouth affects trees is told by the "increment borer," a hollow auger used to cut a small core of wood out of a tree's heart. It represents a cross section of the tree's annual growth rings, laid against each other like a pile of pennies from the heart out to the bark. The section that the borer hollows out reveals not only the tree's age but the conditions of growth during every year of its life.

Sections from trees in drouth-stricken states show very thin rings for 1930. Some trees show two rings for the same year. Rain that broke the drouth temporarily encouraged growth.

Home Owned Stores Open For Business On Memorial Day

We are four of the Independent Merchants who refused to sign a petition to close our places of business all day Memorial Day. We would have been glad to close for a half day to attend a Memorial Service, but the Memorial Service is to be Sunday morning at 11:00 a. m. at the M. E. church.

We are going to attend this service because we realize and appreciate the supreme sacrifice made by those who died for our country. We do not think it is right to close our places of business and go off on a pleasure trip Saturday. We also realize that to close all day would be inconvenient for the housewife and busy farmers. It would be impossible for the housewife to puy perishable foods, such as fresh meat and vegetables for Sunday dinner and it would work a hardship on farmers to quit their work and come to town on Friday for their week's supplies.

We believe that if the employees of stores owned by out of town people had their pay stopped while their stores were closed, there would not be so much of this closing done. This would be a help as it is not a very good advertisement for a customer to drive a long ways to trade in Artesia and find all business houses closed.

We appreciate and need your patronage.

CHAPTER XVIII
Upon the invitation of General Petain I went to the French front to be present at their second offensive since General Nivelle's failure in April, arriving by motor at the headquarters of General d'Esperey, commander of the group of armies of the north, on the evening of October 22, 1917.

The plans for the attack were explained to us, and from the extreme care taken in working out the details and from their accurate knowledge of the enemy's forces and his position, there seemed to be little doubt of success.

Soon after their victory near Verdun in August the French had begun to prepare for this offensive. In which they could not well afford to fall. The advance was made by eight divisions of the Sixth army on a front of only seven and a half miles extending along the Aisne, with the object of gaining a more advantageous position for the winter and also still further building up French morale.

Extended Artillery Fire.
General Maistre, the army commander, gave the operation his personal attention, prescribing an artillery preparation covering six days, during which the expenditure of ammunition was even greater than in the offensive of August 20. The long period of artillery fire was considered necessary, as the Germans were strongly fortified along the chalky bluffs of the Aisne, where numerous caverns afforded cover for large garrisons held near the front.

The assaulting lines of infantry, accompanied by numerous tanks, succeeded without difficulty in reaching the limited objectives. Fort Maimaison, the key point, was reduced to a heap of rubbish by the very heavy artillery fire concentrated upon it. The capture of this dominant position by the French caused the immediate withdrawal of the Germans on the right and left, and during the succeeding fortnight they retired behind the Ailette.

Victory is Offset.
This achievement of the French in capturing positions against which the April offensive by Nivelle dashed itself to pieces had a very stimulating effect upon their morale, but it would have been more lasting had it not been followed so soon by the serious defeat of the Italians at Caporetto October 24.

After extending thanks to our host we left for Compiegne, literally covered with mud, stopping material had been sent over, this new construction was delayed principally because of the lack of piling which the engineers had planned to have brought from the Pacific coast.

An incident happened in connection with the shipments of piling from home that would have been amusing if it had not been so serious. One ship that reached Bordeaux was supposed to be loaded with especially long piling, but upon inspection the engineers found it much shorter than prescribed. Upon inquiry it was learned that to get the piles in between bulkheads the supercargo had sawed the ends off. While speaking of forest products another example of inefficiency that occurred a little later might be mentioned.

One of the vessels from home was loaded by the quartermaster's department with shavings for the cold storage plant instead of steel billets for the manufacture of guns when tons of sawdust and shavings could have been obtained from the logging districts in France.

Trouble With Russians.
Continuing the inspection, we went on Sunday to Cornau, about forty miles from Bordeaux, thinking it might possibly be available for our use later on. It was then occupied by a brigade of disaffected Russians, who, like most of their fellows, had defied their officers and refused to participate further in the war. After being withdrawn from the line they had given the French so much trouble, even to committing depredations on the people, that they had to be sent out of the zone of the armies to this rather remote camp, where they were held practically as prisoners.

There was no transportation to carry them back to Russia, and as they had been allowed to keep their arms it was difficult to enforce discipline among them. I spoke to two colonels and criticized the lack of sanitation, but it was evident that they were unable to compel the men to work, even to the extent of cleaning out stables, latrines or drains, and the conditions may be better imagined than described. The men were a stupid-looking lot, who, in their new estate, apparently did not care how bad things were so long as the French continued to feed and clothe them.

Progress Is Noted.
Gievres, which lies 100 miles directly south of Paris, became the site of our principal supply depot in France. Under Col. C. J. Symmonds' able and energetic direction ing British and French divisions to Italy had materially weakened the lines in France. Mr. Lloyd George also spoke at some length on the lack of concerted action among the allied armies.

I agreed with him and added that in my opinion there never had been real co-operation on the western front between the British and French, that when one was attacking the other was usually standing still, and that the Germans were thus left free to concentrate their reserves against the threatened point.

We were facing a grave crisis next year, if not sooner, said Mr. Lloyd George, and no one knew how it was to be met. The enemy might attack each one separately, with the same results as in the case of Italy. He then asked what I thought of creating a supreme war council.

Having in mind councils called to decide upon military operations in the field, I told him that the advice of war councils was not unusual of any great value and that the proposition did not appeal to me. I said that authority should be vested somewhere to co-ordinate the operations on the western front, and suggested the possibility of having a supreme commander.

Lloyd George Favors Council.
Mr. Lloyd George replied, in effect, that it was unlikely that the allies could agree upon any one, as the French would object to any but a Frenchman and the British might not like that. He thought the council would be useful for the purpose primarily of bringing the heads of the allied governments together at intervals to determine general policies.

I admitted that such an organization might serve to unite the allies in common purpose, but that the conduct of operations by the combined armies should be under military direction. I got the distinct impression that while he was seeking to secure greater unity of action, he also sought some means of controlling the activities of the British army. During previous months that army had been engaged in almost continuous offensive operations, practically single-handed, with very heavy losses and few compensating advantages.

Mr. Lloyd George went on to say that there was to be a meeting of the prime ministers at Rapallo, Italy, and that he hoped they might reach some agreement that would result in a council such as he had in mind. He thought that the United States ought to be represented at this meeting and suggested that I should attend. As the purpose of a council seemed to be more for political co-ordination than for purely military control, I told him that it seemed best for me not to participate without some intimation from my government to do so.

In the afternoon, at M. Painleve's request, I called on him, and he also told me of the proposal to form a supreme war council and wanted me to go to the conference in Italy. I gave him the same reply that I had given Mr. Lloyd George.

Shortly thereafter the Rapallo meeting was held, resulting in an agreement among the prime ministers of the governments participating, Great Britain, France and Italy.

Approved by Wilson.

The creation of the council did not meet with universal approval. The commanders of the British and French armies and many high officials in civil circles being opposed to it. Military commanders were afraid it would result in undue interference with the conduct of operations and in derision it was often referred to as the Soviet.

The action of the three governments at Rapallo was approved by President Wilson, November 17, and that fact appeared in the press a day or so later.

The President's action strengthened the hands of those who favored the council and probably became the influence that saved it. The fact is that if the French and British army commanders, in a friendly spirit of co-operation, had made a joint study of the military problem of the western front as a whole and then had seriously undertaken to pull together, as though under one control, the supreme war council would never have been born.

The supreme war council made a favorable start and gave the impression that a wise and conservative exercise of its really unlimited powers would characterize its actions. It refrained from interfering directly with military commanders and operations and confined itself largely to questions of policy, such as the co-ordination of allied resources and the conservation and distribution of allied strength. However, as time went on, the supreme war council assumed greater and greater authority over military questions.

Conflicts With Wilson Ideals.
As to the political situation, the undercurrent at the moment, as nearly as could be learned, showed a continued lack of accord among the different nations, which were not at all in agreement with President Wilson's ideals. Each had its own aspirations and each sought to gain some advantage over the others. Some of the divergent war aims had to do with territory distant from France and troops were sent that might have been more usefully employed on the western front.

In a letter to Secretary of War Baker I inclosed a memorandum which was a report of a conversation held by a man in my confidence with a British official high up in the counsel of Great Britain. The date of this conversation was October 24, 1917.

"Perhaps it should not be taken too seriously," I wrote, "but it is an indication of the British attitude."

Sees Difference in Aims.

In this conversation the British official declared: "The European allies and America are not fighting for the same thing. Mr. Wilson thinks a great deal more of his ideas of people governing themselves, or a friend-

By working arrangement among all the great powers after the war, than he does of territorial or specific things going to this or that country. What he wants is to smash the German military power and have a society of democratic nations afterwards. But to England, France and Italy these things are phrases, useful, perhaps, but of secondary interest.

"England wants to maintain her colonial possessions to keep her position on the sea, and her commercial place in the world. We know what France wants—Alsace Lorraine, as indemnity and security for the future. Italy has definite territorial claims. Thus the governments of these countries think a great deal about what they want for themselves and less about ideals, unless these ideals are incidental to success. So there is no clear unity among the allies in Europe and America."

there to congratulate General Petain on the success of the day. While at Compiegne we dropped in at the dispensary where some American women under Miss Elsie De Wolfe (who afterward became Lady Mendil) maintained a clinic for badly burned gas cases. We also made a brief call at the hospital nearby to see Colonel Bunau-Varilla of Panama canal fame, who had lost a leg at the recent French offensive near Verdun. From his cheerful mood he seemed to be rather proud of his wound.

In 1927 I took part in the dedication of the Ossuary near Verdun, at which Colonel Bunau-Varilla was present. On the rounds to inspect this fine monument we passed the many bays which contain the bones of men who lost their lives in the great battle. When we came to the bay corresponding to the sector in which he fought, he joyfully remarked that he thought his leg must be in there.

Dock Construction Delayed.
Toward the end of October, accompanied by Gens. Richard N. Blatchford and Mason M. Patrick, and Col. Charles R. Krauthoff and David S. Stanley, I visited Bordeaux, one of the ports chosen for the use of American troops. As facilities were only sufficient to accommodate a limited amount of additional medium draft shipping, we had started the construction of new docks at Bassens, 12 miles below, where deep water would permit vessels to come alongside. Although considerable quantities of construction to cover an area of 12 square miles was going forward with all possible speed. Colonel Symmonds was gradually putting order and system into the place. Regardless of the adverse conditions under which the line of communications was laboring there was everywhere a fine and enthusiastic spirit among the officers and men, who, without exception, were cheerful and optimistic.

After all, considering the lack of men and material, we were making progress on the physical side of the organization that would feed, clothe and furnish munitions for the great army we hoped to have.

One obstacle, however, was to be found in the number of independent bureaus represented at the ports and the larger centers of activity, not only in our own system but especially in that of the French, and the consequent difficulty of securing teamwork among them. As a remedy I sent to each base section a competent general officer with an organized staff to co-ordinate and systematize the management of affairs, and in a brief time considerable improvement was noticeable in methods of handling troop arrivals and cargo and in the increased progress of construction.

COX HELD FOR THEFT OF A CAR FROM MT. RANCHER RECENTLY

ALAMOGORDO — Lionel (Breezy) Cox, cowboy and rodeo performer held under $1,700 bond in connection with the Tularosa bank robbery was arraigned on last Thursday before U. S. Commissioner Tom Charles on a charge of violating the Dyer Act. Cox is charged with the theft of a car from Dusty, N. M.
Cox, Thursday morning was preparing to leave the county jail after he had secured the required $1700 bond when he was arrested by U. S. Marshal "Jim" Johnson of Roswell.
Represented by his Attorney J. L. Lawson, Cox demanded that his hearing be held Thursday May 28. The government requested that they also be allowed time to secure witnesses from Arizona for the hearing.
At first the date for the hearing was set for Friday but Cox objected on the grounds that he "disliked any trial on Friday."
Cox was recently bound over to the June term of the district court after a hearing here. His bond was set at $1700. At that time several witnesses failed to identify him as one of the three men who robbed the First State Bank of Tularosa of over $11,000 in cash and securities.
The car which Cox is alleged to have taken from Dusty, N. M. belonged to E. H. Welty and was found by officers seven miles from the place in Arizona where Cox was arrested.

Cox To Be Arraigned June 2
Lionel "Breezy" Cox, charged with participating in recent Tularosa bank hold up, will be taken before the United States commissioner at Alamogordo June 2 for preliminary hearing on a charge of violating the federal law against transporting a stolen car across state boundaries. Notice of the setting was received Monday at the federal district attorney's office.
Assistant U. S. District Attorney Gilbert Espinosa will go to Alamogordo to prosecute the case. The charge against Cox is based on the theft of a Ford coupe in which he allegedly made a getaway from Dusty, N. M., to Duncan, Arizona.

Restless, could not sleep
"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would have to lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.
My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

Things WORTH KNOWING

The federal law requires that in labeling livestock feeds, the net weight of contents must be printed on the label of the container in a plain and conspicuous manner.

Many farmers overcome the difficulty of curing the heavy green stems of sweetclover by cutting the hay with a binder.

Chemists of the U. S. Department have found that the proteins in sweetpotatoes are a good source of some of the amino acids which are essential for the growth and nutrition of animals.

Farmers who feed supplements to grass-fattened beef cattle are often undecided whether to feed the supplement throughout the grazing season or only during the latter part.

TANKS REPLACE HORSES

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Speedy man-made tanks are going to replace about 8,000 horses in a part of the United States cavalry.

When General Douglas MacArthur, chief of army staff, last week announced his mechanization program for the cavalry, he said this step was being undertaken in an effort to modernize that branch of the defensive forces.

There is a natural public conception, General MacArthur said, that cavalry means horses, but he added "Modern firearms have eliminated the horse as a weapon, and as a means of transportation he has generally become, next to the dismounted man, the slowest means of transportation."

FALL AGREES TO TAKE THE BRIBERY CASE TO U. S. SUPREME COURT

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Albert B. Fall will carry to the supreme court his conviction of accepting a $100,000 bribe while he was interior secretary under President Harding.

One of his counsel, Frank J. Hogan, announced that friends and counsel of the 69-year-old former cabinet officer had succeeded in convincing Fall that the case should not stop short of the supreme court.

Hence, Hogan said, Fall, from his Three Rivers, New Mexico, home has instructed his attorneys to petition the highest judicial group to review a District of Columbia appeals court decision upholding the conviction, a year's prison sentence and a $100,000 fine.

After the District of Columbia court announced its decision last month, Fall said he no longer would contest the case charging him with accepting the bribe from Edward L. Doherty, wealthy oil man.

Mr. Fall has now decided to yield to the advice of his attorneys and to the importunities of his family and friends, Hogan said.

DOGS TURN IN WOODS STATE OF

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The U. S. Fish and Wildlife Commission is presenting a proposition to the American Game and Fish Association...

Numerous complaints have been received from hunters in Pennsylvania that families of deer are hunting in parks and reservations which have caused the stricter control of game and house cats during and breeding seasons.

Several dens have been discovered where dogs were being kept by their owners, have been killed by the proposed law. The animals that do not die are thought a number of wild dogs have been pursuing game.

To simplify the law and half wild house cats and fields a bill was introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature which would tag their pets.

Officials now hold that cats are the worst pest life in cities as well as areas. WHEN TO CUT Alfalfa hay is important during the spring months when game is being raised, but the lives to be saved by curbing the destructive cats by outlawing them.
