rate, R. H. Westaway, of Carls-bad, deputy assessor said here yesterday. A slight cut in the ax rate is probable, according to Mr. Westaway, notwithstanding the fact that the county suffered an approximate $500,000 cut in tax valuations. The drop in tax valuations is largely accounted for by a fifty per cent cut in the valuation of sheep, a twentyfive per cent reduction in the Organization Favored By valuation of cattle and reduced mercantile stocks.

If the 10 per cent cut in the respective school budgets remains effective, it will mean $24,000 less for school expenses. This together with what the county commissioners have been able to whittle from the county budget is responsible for keeping the The W. C. T. U. meeting held rate down. The buggest cut has come from the operating expenses about $400,000.

WAYS TO MAKE A TOWN GROW

We have sat in on several discussions on the best ways and means to make a town grow. To us this is an interesting subject, just as it should be to every other citizen. During the discussions we have heard some practical theories advanced and some that would be very impractical it seems to us. Sooner or later the subject of a town or community growth, drifted back to the best after cutting. Better protection means of attracting people with wealth. This we admit sounds very beautiful, but in advancing the various ideals necessary to promulgate the growth of a community by attracting wealth, we should take into consideration the fact that we are entering a field of nation wide competition; every other progressive community is trying to do the same thing. And the question naturally revolves itself around the attractions of the community. If we have the attractions, getting the rich fellow to look us over is the easiest states, where much hay is pro-

The matter of increasing our population is comparatively simple; just show the new comer how he can make an easy living and that the opportunity is here and presto, we have accomplished our measuring both oblong and round good mixture is a supplement for aim. What the average individual is interested in is the opportunity and if we can show him that we have opportunities here we have acquired another resident. We can double our population within sixty days and get some wealth too, if we can furnish em-

Attracting wealth is a possibility that we in a measure may have overlooked. Developing our natural resources is a probability that we can realize on, if we work hard enough. We can increase our farming territory. This however, can not be accomplished within sixty days, it takes time. Conservation of our water supply will eventually bring more farming land under cultivation. Just at the present time if appears that we have hit on a plan that is satisfactory to almost everybody involved and incidentally it is the first time that we recall that the efforts of a few to work out a conservation program has met with almost unanimous approval. Still the public does not appear to take the interest that one would think they would.

Development of oil resources has taken place within the past five years, which at the beginning was only a probability. Development of our potash deposits is only a probability that we have begun to realize on, notwithstanding the fact that our particular community will derive no direct benefits from its developmens. Cheap fuel, which is a future probability may be the means of developing our vast gyp beds and of establishing a brick making industry. As a matter of fact reduced fuel costs have already been the means of farming more lands.

The above instances are just a few probabilities five or six years ago. Progress along the right lines will bring us more.

A WARNING WORTH HEEDING

Senator Borah of Idaho, nationally known for his progressive policies, has issued a public warning that the federal government is building a bureaucracy, which will demand permanent increases in expenditures and taxation unless stopped by "angry public opin-

"Angry public opinion" will have to express itself in other ways than merely oral fault-finding with public officials, state legislatures and congress.

The people have a check on taxation within their own hands. They can vote against men and measures that they know have increased or will increase taxes unnecessarily. If the people fail to recognize their power and obligation in this matter and fail to support men who are working to hold down taxes and fail to vote against measures that they know will increase taxes, they will have only themselves to blame for a back-breaking load of taxation that they will have to pay annually if public levies continue to increase as they have during the past decade, out of all proportion to growth in population and wealth.

BISHOP CANNON GOES AFTER BIG MONEY

Not satisfied with having sued a member of congress for damages to his reputation which he estimates at a half million dollars, Bishop James Cannon has brought suit against William Randolph Hearst for $1,500,000, claiming the newspaper man has damaged him that amount by articles which have appeared in his paper, the Los Angeles Examiner.

The thing which is difficult for the average layman to understand is how Mr. Hearst could possibly injure any one a million and a half dollars worth no difference what he might have to say about him. It just simply isn't possible. Then equally as difficult to understand is how any one could possibly injure bishop that much even if he should devote whole issues of his paper to that

If the bishop should reduce his claim to about $1.50 there might possibly be a shadow of a possibility of his winning.-Lovington Leader.

Speaking of the ways to improve our city, you know a little paint sometimes works wonders. We have no paint to sell, but we have noticed that nicely painted property adds to the general attractiveness of a town as nothing else can. In one or two instances, we have visited towns where riding over the streets, one would have to be a good bronco buster to stay in the car seat, but even then, we forgot the rough streets as we looked at the dingy, unkept dwellings. Some of the buildings and paint were strangers and if you don't believe that absence of paint is noticeable, just go back in some of the towns that are standing still.

About one-half million acres of forest land in Wisconsin is still covered with slash from logging operations, according to an investigation by state officials, the forest service reports. This slash often constitutes a fire menace for as much as 8 years or longer for slash covered areas is declared necessary to prevent dis-astrous forest fires.

Farmers, ranchers and hay dealers buy and sell large quantities of hay in the stack. This method of buying hay is most common duced in valleys where it is imractical to weigh it. FALL UNDERGOES AN LOCALS EXAMINATION AT WM. BEAUMONT HOSPITAL

EL PASO, Texas — The most thorough physical examination Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, ever has experienced Monday, with indications it would not be completed for several days. Since he entered the government institution Saturday, in compliance with instructions from Washington authorities, Mr. Fall has been the subject of exhaustive tests which he characterizes as 'undoubtedly the most thorough" in his life. The government sought the examination in an effort to decide conclusively whether he is able to undertake a trip to Washington for commitment to prison for a year. He was given a sentence of a year in jail and $100,000 fine after conviction of accepting a bribe in connection with naval oil leases. Fall said hospital officials had given him the most courteous treatment and had seen that his every personal need was attend-He has been quartered in a ward room where officers and hospital personnel are treated, and attendants are always within easy

"Plaster mold" does not attack the mushroom directly, but the disease is caused by a fungus that runs through the manure and prevents or delays development of the spawn. The plaster mold appears on the surface and sides of the bed as white patches which may seen when the boards are raised. When mature the fungus is coated with powdery spores that separate and are carried readily by wind or insects. These are likely to spread the disease. Plaster mold has been serious in recent years. Scientific High Points in Plowing for Crops

(By DR. M. C. SEWELL, Associate Professor of Soils, Kansas State Agricultural College.) The largest item of expense in producing cereal and annual forage crops is tillage. The most important tillage operations are plowing and cultivat-

Reduction in depth or frequency of plowing, or number of cultivations necessary for economic yields, necessarily reduces the cost of raising the crop. Plowing deeper than six inches for cereals or row crops-excepting root crops-is never warranted. Timeliness-early plowing-is the important factor in wheat tillage-July-plowed ground produced eight bushels to the acre more than September-plowed ground. Nitrogen conservation is the thing for which the farmer plows, not moisture conservation. The dust mulch is no longer considered a useful practice. Cultivation sufficient to keep down weeds is all that is necessary -additional plowing is wasted. Efficient tools, especially power equipment, are of utmost value in tillage in the light of discoveries as to the value of timeliness in

The great outdoors is worth more than a billion dollars a year to the United States, according to estimates of the American Game Association.

Classing hunters and fishermen, tourists and vacationists under one head, their expenditures for nature outings would be stag-gering. For example, W. C. Henlerson, associate chief of the U.S. Bureau of Biological Survey, has estimated that game and fish alone are worth $80,000,000 a year to the state of Maine. Covered Wagon Days

In the days of the ploneer treks across the plains courage was required to face the 2,000 miles stretching bleakly in front of them. A typical train consisted of one wagon, "two yoke of four-year-old steers and one yoke of cows." In front of them were rivers, mountains, thirst, hunger, privation and the pestilence that overtook mi-grating hordes. Soon they were in a column of wagons said to be 500 miles long—all moving toward the west, their occupants without proper food, dependent upon unhealthful streams for water, enveloped in an intolerable dust. In calm weather the dust would rise so thick at times that the lead team of oxen could not be seen from the wagon. Then, again, the steady flow of wind would hurl the dust and sand like fine hall, with force enough to sting the face and

The Latest CORONA

No radical changes.

But some interesting refinements and a few added features.

For one thing you may now have a paper bail on your Corona, if you prefer the bail to paper fingers.

You may also order your machine equipped with 1, 11/2, 2 line spacing. All typewriters will space single or double between lines; but the 11/2 space is some thing new. It gives a very pleasing effect to a letter and allows you to get more words on a page.

There are other interesting things to learn about the latest Corona. We haven't the space here to describe them; but we will gladly explain them fully it you will drop in or phone us.

A LARGE portion of the funds required in home building always has been furnished by banks.

vancement re-R. C. STEPHENSON dounds to the advantage of all. So banking has never lessened its co-operative attitude toward home building.

Practically all banks now accept savings deposits which can well be turned to the advantage of the home builders. The construction seems at first obscure, abstract, large amount of financing and is and dark; but a bright promise a thoroughly commendable enterprise. Necessarily, the aid given to home builders is governed by the sound banking rules which have grown out of the years of experience and constant studies.

All of the efforts made to secure broader real estate loan privileges, to adjust resources to make it possible to lend larger sums for longer terms, the standardization of mortgage loan formulas, and the actual lending of vast sums on mortgage notes evidence the desire of banks to contribute a full measure of support of the home-building movement. This is true of all classes of banks, but even in a more marked degree of those whose deposits are largely in the form of savings.

Both Sides Protected

The process through which bank loans are made on real estate is as simple as the nature of such an important transaction will permit. When money is advanced the lender must know that repayment will be made the specified time. Likewise the borrower wants to be assured that, after he has figured the loan on the basis of his conservatively anticipated ability to pay, he will not be required to do more, that he will not be disturbed in his efforts to work out of his obligations under those terms.

There is no mystery about any of the details, and when the negotiations are complete the borrower knows just what he may ex- weeks or a month. pect and what he will be required to do to meet his obligations.

Loans made to persons who wish to acquire homes are not necessarily building loans. One may wish to purchase a home already constructed. In this form of transaction bank loans are used very freely because it is the only kind of a real estate loan some classes of banks may make. Others of course, may lend upon real estate with improvements uncompleted and advance funds as the construction progresses. Different styles in home financing have developed in the various states, and banks have adopted their facilities to all needs.

Among banks and borrowers for home acquisition purposes a long established and thoroughly tested relationship exists. Banks are not the only agencies through which such funds are available; they do not embody all the spirit of helpfulness which abounds. However, through the years of their co-operation their aid has been of unquestioned value to the home builders whose efforts to establish a permanence for themselves have received constant encouragement. Bankers everywhere are ready to counsel with their customers about their home-building plans and to assist to the extent of their ability. This is being done constantly and the many advantages of it are not without recognition.

My Experiences in the World War

BY GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING

 CHAPTER XXVII

Every one in authority realized that all resources the allies could muster would be required to meet successfully the great offensive of the central powers expected in the spring, but to use them effectively close co-operation among commanders would be imperative. With this in mind I proposed to Premier Clemenceau that the commanders in chief and chiefs of staff get together to examine the situation and if possible determine a general program of combined ac-

M. Clemenceau at once approved the suggestion. It was also favorably received by General Foch, who, it will be recalled, was chief of the French general staff. I proposed that the meeting be held at my headquarters, but the French lected Compiegne, Petain's G.

At the meeting, January 24, 1918, Robertson, for the British, spoke first, and suggested a general state ment as to: (1) Mutual support between allied armies. (2) Situation as to reserves. (3) Question of troops in Italy. (4) Situation as to the transportation of the American army and facilities given it in Petain Favored Defensive.

General Petain thought that for the present the allies would be forced to remain on the defensive because of lack of men. He said the French army had 97 divisions with an infantry strength of from 5,000 to 6,000 men each, some thirty odd of these divisions being in reserve and the rest in the trenches, besides eight cavalry divisions, two of which were dismounted and six mounted.

All divisions he thought could be kept up until April if there should be no fighting, but later on, even without a battle, he would have to break up five divisions to maintain the others, the six mounted cavalry divisions would have to be reduced to four, and before the end of the year the total force would have to be reduced by 20

Foch Was for Counteroffensive. General Foch declared that the best means of halting a strong and persistent offensive was a powerful counteroffensive.

"The German offensive at Verdun was stopped not by our resistance there but by our offensive on the Somme in 1916," said General Foch. "Such an operation is possible only when foreseen and prepared before In planning the counteroffensive I think that the entire front must be considered as a whole and not the French as one part and the British as another. The plan must envisage them together preparing for offensive ac tion on a common battle field with all the forces at their disposal."

General Robertson expressed accord with Foch, but he did not see where or with what means such an offensive could be executed, and stated that the war could not be won by remaining on the defensive. "Give us back the troops from Salonika and we will commence offensives," said General Haig.

'We were not speaking of offensives, but of counteroffensives," General Foch replied.

General Robertson remarked that of course the French and British could reinforce each other and make counterattacks, and then "Could they do more than that?"

"Not without the Americans," General Petain answered him.

Dependent Upon U. S. General Robertson then said: "I think our only hope lies in American reserves," and he wanted to

I stated that but few of the allied authorities seemed to realize that American participation would depend upon the amount of shipping available for the transportation of our troops, and that the time when they would be needed was near at hand. As there had been some reference to amalgamation, I also took occasion to emphasize the point that we expected as a matter of course that the American army would have its own front as an independent force and not be used merely as a reserve to be sent here and there. One insuperable rea son, I said, why we could not amalgamate with the French, was the difference in language, and I added that we would not use our troops in that way at all unless it became absolutely necessary.

I then discussed our problems, calling attention to the delays at the French ports and our shortage of rail transportation, and touched on the backward state of procurement of equipment, munitions and airplanes. They all appeared surprised to learn of our difficulties, especially General Foch, although even as chief of the general staff, he apparently could not interfere in matters handled directly by the ministry. It was astonishing to find how little comprehension any of them had of the enormous task that-confronted the Americans.

Foch said: "None of these questions has been referred to me.' whereupon Petain retorted that "one should not wait until such things are brought to his attention, but should look around and find them." Petain added at once that he would send an official to study our situation, and Haig later sent one of his officers, who offered many suggestions out of his own

Bliss Favors British Plan. Conversations with General Robertson continued the next day at the Crillon botel in Paris, with General Bliss present. The same arguments were repeated in favor incorporating American units Into British divisions, and General

Bliss expressed himself in favor of the Robertson plan. I was forced to declare myself then and there. My stand was not quite what General Robertson had expected, and the meeting adjourned with the position of all concerned no longer in doubt.

General Bliss and I met later by appointment to talk the matter over between ourselves and, if possible, come to an understanding After some discussion he suggested that each of us cable his views to Washington and ask for a decision. It was not my policy then or at any other time to put anything up to Washington that I could possibly decide myself.

This would have been the last thing to do in this case, especially as the secretary had left in my hands the determination as to how our troops should be employed. For two men in our positions to have appealed in this way would have indicated a clash, and Washington had enough trouble; besides, the secretary could not possibly have been sufficiently in touch with the undercurrent of these negotiations to make a wise decision.

So I said: "Well, Bliss, do you know what would happen if we should do that? We would both be relieved from further duty in France, and that is exactly what we should deserve."

We then spent some time examining the question from all angles, until finally he came around to my view and said: "I think you are right, and I shall back you up in the position you have taken."

CHAPTER XXVIII

Once General Bliss and I had reached an understanding as to our attitude toward amalgamation of our troops with the British he gave me his support in later conferences. When we saw the British representative for further talks at Versailles January 29, 1918, all their arguments were met frankly and squarely. After they had presented their case Prime Minister Lloyd George asked Bliss for his views, to which he replied:

"Pershing will speak for us and whatever he says with regard to the disposition of the American troops will have my approval." agreement was then signed

Mr. Lloyd George, General Maurice and myself as set forth in the following copy of the memorandum submitted and later cabled to Washington.

"In order to meet the situation as presented by Sir William Robertson and hasten the arrival and training of troops, it is proposed that the British government use the available sea transportation in question for bringing over the personnel of entire divisions under the following conditions:

"1. That the infantry and auxillary troops of these divisions be trained with British divisions by battalions, under such plan as may "2. That the artillery be trained under American direction in the use of French material as at pres-3. That the higher commanders and staff officers be assigned for training and experience with corresponding units of the British

"4. That when sufficiently trained. these tattallons be reformed into regiments and that when the artillery is fully trained all the units comprising each division be united under their own officers for serv

5. That the above plan be car ried out without interference with the plans now in operation for bringing over American forces, "6. That question of supply be arranged by agreement between the British and American commanders-in-chief. "7. That question of arms and equipment be settled in similar

War Council Meets Again. The supreme war council began its third session January 30. the opening session Mr. Lloyd George made a statement in some detail of the situation on the allied fronts. He then spoke of the large mber of casualties the allies had suffered during 1917 and in a very pointed manner declared that the costly offensives had produced no tangible results. But instead, he said, the allies now found themselves short of man power at a critical period of the war. His sharp criticism was evidently directed at Sir Douglas Haig and General Robertson, but neither was given an opportunity to reply.

The military representatives pre sented a joint note with reference to military policy, as directed at the December meeting, and the opinion given was identical with the conference at Complegne January 24 and also in August at the meeting in Paris, except that the campaign under General Allenby, then in progress in Palestine, should continue,

The joint note was approved as the decision of the council, with the understanding, as suggested by the French, that no white troops should be sent from France to Pal-It was decidedly the opinion of M. Clemenceau and of all others present who expressed themselves that the war could not be ended until 1919 when the American army, it was thought, would

The allied forces at the moment were superior in all active fronts. except in the Balkans, but the Greek mobilization, when completed, would add sufficient strength to give the allies the advantage there also. The American strength was then negligible, but the prospect was that we should have a few more divisions ready for service by June, and by September possibly divisions.

The danger on the western front lay in the continuous increase of the German forces and in their ability to concentrate in turn against the French and British, and as neither had sufficient reserves of their own it was clear that unless some arrangement could be made between them for better co-ordination and support the war might easily be lost before the Americans should arrive.

Plan Allied Reserve. The study of this problem by the military representatives led to another joint note which proposed a plan for the organization of a general allied reserve. It provided that the British, French and Italian armies each set apart a certain number of divisions to constitute this reserve, which would be called into action only in a great emergency. The discussion of this question became acrimonious. Haig and Petain both pointed out that they would be short of divisions very soon in case of severe fighting and presented figures on the subject that were very disturbing.

But the council's scheme was cut and dried. The recommendations set forth in the note were adopted then and there by the The general reserve was created and its control was placed under an executive war board to consist of Generals Foch, representing the French, chairman: Bliss, the Americans; Cadorna, the Italians, and a British general officer to be named.

At this meeting Mr. Lloyd George designated Gen, Sir Henry Wilson as British representative, to the very evident disappointment of General Robertson, who was present at the session. The selection of Wilson was regarded by the British high command and the war office as open disapproval of their conduct of the war. It has been said that the winter of 1917-18 was the most severe of the war. The cold was at times so intense as to make the generally unheated houses, barns and lofts used as billets nearly uninhabitable. The gloom of short days and long nights in the isolated and largely depopulated French villages can hardly be described.

was also a shortage of heavy winter clothing, although frequent cables early in the fall had called attention to the probability of a deficiency. No doubt the demands were greater than the quartermaster department could meet, but the relatively small number of troops in France going through the winter under actual war conditions should have been given first con-

The deficiencies were met in part by purchases from the British, alough our men did not take kindly to the idea of wearing the uni-form of another nation, and it was with considerable protest and chagrin that they did so until our own uld be supplied.

To the credit of our officers and men be it said that they generally ignored adverse conditions, and, barring some irritation at French methods and occasionally at our own, they kept at their tasks with commendable determination. Look-ing back over the different phases of the war I regard that winter, with its difficulties, anxieties and apprehension for the future, as the most trying period of them all, them understand. How in the world it happens, sir, that we do so well I do not see.

"Here we have come 3,000 miles to help them and yet we are treated like mendicants on the street corner holding a tin cup for passing pennies. I know, sir, that co-operation is necessary if we hope to win the war but it requires an excessive effort on our part, with more failures than otherwise to our credit." This was harsh comment, but there were times in the experience of most officers when it seemed to fit the case fairly well. Officers Found Lax.

With reference to the inspection trip noted in my diary, I had recently inspected several stations Vittel and Bourbonne-les-Bains, which were commanded by regular officers, of whom, natural much was expected, but before the World war our army had always been more or less careless in dress and none too strict when in the field, and these were no exception to the rule. Even higher commanders were often found neglectful of their appearance and lax in the enforcement of discipline. But the conditions of service in France demanded more serious attention to these essentials, not only as a matter of pride but because of the general effect upon morale and efficiency. Good discipline is the first requisite to successful military effort, and the degree of its enforcement in a comnand is an almost certain index of the character of performance to be expected in battle. Likewise, an officer or soldier who takes no pride in his personal appearance is usually found careless in other respects and to that as we were still far behind our extent less reliable in time of stress. It need hardly be added that those of this class who came under my observation and did not immediately respond to correction were very soon replaced.

> CHAPTER XXX Frequent German raids and renewed activities all along the front by March 1, 1918, indicated the great German offensive might start at any time. The French general staff thought the allies would be able to hold without serious difficulty until we could help, but it was doubtful enough to cause grave apprehension. It was depressing to think that > ten months had elapsed since our entry into the war and that we were just barely ready with one division of 25,000 men. My dairy shows the following notations:

Chaumont, Wednesday, March 6, 1918.-Heavy German raid repulsed by First division Friday morning. The enemy also raided the Twenty-sixth division lines and were driven off. Went to Ligny-en-Barrois Sunday to meet M. Clemen-

Upon conclusion of this inspec tion of the First division I considered it ready to take the offensive at any time. It had been eight months in France, with varied experiences in training, had occupied an independent position in the St Mihiel sector and had made several successful trench raids.

The front occupied by the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth regiment: near Badonvillers, had been under severe artillery attack on the fourth and a trench mortar platoon had been almost completely destroyed. The French army commander congratulated Menoher on the way in which our troops repulsed this raid. After an inspection of the different regiments of the division and a visit to the scene of this action, I went to the hospital to see the wounded.

They were all very cheerful, especially a young officer, Lieut. A. W. Terrell, Fifty-first artillery regiment, who had lost a leg. He said that he wanted to stay through to the end of the war, and hoped he could find something to do as a clerk. All these first contacts with the enemy were relatively small affairs, of course, but they furnished many examples of what we could expect of the American

Like tobacco... the best Gasoline is Blended

JOU may prefer Burley tobacco with a touch of Turk-I ish or a mixture which includes Perique. Whatever the preference, every good smoke is blended, expertly.

Of the various types of gasoline no one is a perfect motor fuel. So CONOCO refiners have developed their balanced blend, using: Natural Gasoline, for quick starting; Straight-run Gasoline, for power and mileage; Cracked Gasoline, for its anti-knock properties.

As expertly as the tobacco leaves are mellowed and combined these three elements are produced and blended to make CONOCO Balanced Blend Gasoline. You will find this better gasoline wherever you see the CONOCO Red Triangle. Try it today.

> "The committee's suggested conservancy law would be administered by a commission whose orders. rules and regulations are to be enforced by mandatory injunction and any oil operator, violating said orders, rules or regulations may be punished by fine or imprisonment or both. 'Government y injunction' sure puts real teeth into orders, rules and regulations. However, that form of government has never been popular with the American people.

> "It now appears to be the general opinion of oil men that the three section conservancy law. recently passed by the California legislature, which is considered a model conservancy measure, will be taken as a guide by other oil states rather than the thirteen section conservancy suggestion of the oil states advisory committee. No 'government by injunction' program appears in the California conservancy law.

"A sane oil conservancy law will probably meet with general approval in all the oil states, including, of course, New Mexico. However, in view of the fact that this state has rigidly prorated below the allowable production of any other oil state, one wonders why an oil conservation drive should now be made on New Mexico, before offending states like Texas 'set their house in order.

"The interstate compact suggested by the oil states advisory committee appears to be an orphan that nobody wants. Before him, their culinary code was a collection of scraps picked up here and there, the names of dishes were as barbarous and uncouth as the dishes themselves.

Gonthier is the father of cookery, as Descartes of French philosophy. It is said that he invented, in less than ten years, nine ragouts, thirtyone sauces and twenty-one soups.

Tempting Dog's Appetite

Nursing a sick dog, especially when it is in the convalescent stage, is not an easy task, as any dog owner who has been through it knows. One owner was having great difficulty in getting his dog to eat. He mentioned the matter to another dog owner, an old-timer who had been through much of it. said he: "I got this from an old lady when I was a kid, and I'm no spring chicken. You might think it's an old-fashioned notion, but I've tried it and never knew it to fail. Try the dog on a little smoked herring, just enough to get him start-It's great as an appetizer."

The owner followed the suggestion, and sure enough, the dog ate the smoked herring with relish, and then turned to a few other things. After a few days, with an occasional taste of smoked herring, the dog's appetite came back. Oldfashioned or not, the treatment was successful.-Brockton Enterprise.
