The truth is, of course, that all of us are only here for a little while and then we move on. Our days are few and our days are numbered, even if we don't like to think this is true.

And when death comes along it should at least remind us if we are not the one, who has been called, that life is short and that we could all afford to be a little more thoughful, a little more considerate, a little more fair and just a little more decent to our fellow citizens. It would probably
