An Uncertain World

An Editorial

In seeking a second National Guard regiment for New Mexico we believe that Governor Miles is acting with commendable foresight and is motivated by a desire to aid in every way possible in the present drive to strengthen our national defence.

We are living in an uncertain world. No one knows what the morrow may bring, and few have the temerity to even hazard a guess. Whether or not America will be allowed to continue the comparatively tranquil existence which has been ours for the past 150 years is anyone's guess. It seems that our only course is to prepare hastily for the worst and hope fervently for the best.

The National Guard is an American institution. It is this country's ace in the hole in a time of national emergency. Young men who join this organization are the recipients of valuable training. This training gives them a very definite advantage in the event they are ever called upon for active service with the country's armed force, and is likewise a lifelong benefit in the pursuits of industry and peace. The discipline learned in the National Guard imparts self-confidence and self-control to every young man who serves an enlistment.

America, almost as a unit, does not want war. But world events have impressed upon this country and its people that just the desire to avoid war will not keep it from our shores. Belgium, Holland, Norway and Denmark, as well as other nations of the world have wanted peace. In spite of every precaution they have taken, however, they have been forced into the war they sought to evade.

In the light of recent events in Europe it would seem that the only way this country can hope to avoid being drawn into a conflict with ambitious totalitarian nations of the earth is to make itself so formidable from the standpoint of our ability to wage war that no nation, or any possible combination of nations, will consider the risk worth the prize. We do not want to fight, but in Special musical numbers were played by Miss Mary Cathryn Teel. In the evening a dance was given at the Woodman Hall for the newlyweds.

Every American should support the present movement to prepare the United States for any emergency which may arise out of the war in Europe.

The Voice From the Deep

THE MARRYING OF NELLIE GRAY

By ELSIE J. PEARSON (McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

YOU all know Nellie Gray, who lives on the hill in a big house, has a very nice family, a sport car and a haute...

But poor Nellie Gray; no one knew her well, not even herself. Her mother taught her the proper expressions of scorn, how to smile without warmth, but all her embellishments to the old-time art of being highly snobby she had precociously taught herself.

It was generally admitted by the fairer sex that Bob Swett had the requirements for an ideal beau. Knowing this himself, undoubtedly, was the reason he had aspired to Nellie.

Mr. Gray frankly liked Bob. Mrs. Gray thought it unbecoming and a weakness in one to express anything but dislike. And Nellie was afraid of letting herself slip because of what people might say of the match.

The door opened, though they didn't hear it, and a heavy creaking tread was heard, one peculiar to overfed, underworked matrons.

If one can imagine shock, grief, surprise, hauteur, anger and coldness all burning in two words, imagine then how Mrs. Gray disturbed the peace with her "WHY, HELEN!"

"Mr. Swett, to think that you dare—just think of it—dare to force your cheap and unwelcome affections on my Helen, on her own grounds, in her own home!

"Now, now, dear, it's all right, and I'll see that it won't happen again." With that she swept the unwilling Helen into the house, and the door slammed behind the two.

Bob gaped at the door, and a large round tear of humiliation and anger stood in each eye. He smacked his fist into open palm, and ground out, "By the holy mackerel, I'll marry her, in spite of the old woman."

He went crunching down the gravelled driveway. "She doesn't want a real man," he modestly observed, "with a bean on his shoulders, and a little gumption. She wants a wishy-wishy rotter, with money and a rotten name among real men. These pin-headed girls, they're disgusting."

But he was unwilling to believe it, so he banished those evil thoughts with a mental wish for the final disposition of amiable Mrs. Gray. But opposition worthy of its name always acts as a spur to a man worthy of his captation.

He called her up in the morning, and found that she had a golf engagement and a dance scheduled with Marmaduke for the afternoon and evening. Bob tried to give his voice an authoritative tone.

"Nellie," he began, "I must see you tonight." "Really," she raised her voice to that dangerous level, "and if I can't?"

"Oh, I know you better than that. It's a question of whether you will or you won't, not whether you can or you can't. Is your mother still huffy, or had I better meet you down town?"

Silence for a moment, then the voice back on a normal level said, "Oh, you persistent wretch. Down town, I suppose. Bob, you know, I almost quarreled with mother over you last night. She said some perfectly horrid things about you. She doesn't mean them, I know for sure. And, Bob, I didn't mind last night at all. I hope you didn't feel bad over what mother said. The same time at the same place then. Bye-bye."

"Well, that's that," said Bob, as he hung up with a satisfied air. He paid a hurried visit to the City Hall, conferred with certain officials, then paid a visit to the jeweler, and picked out two articles of jewelry with great care, and even accepted the clerk's advice on a certain matter.

He met her that night at the same place at the same time, and, oh, occasion for great joy! there was a moon out. They both looked up at the moon, then at each other, and were highly satisfied, for they were good to look upon, and soothing to the eye. When they were in the cab, he felt her hand, and found a certain finger, and she made no move. She held up her hand to inspect his activities, and he knew with her smile that all was well. And because he was big and strong and well liked, he sealed the bargain with a kiss.

Then he began his great plea. He marshaled facts, arguments, pleas, entreaties, expostulations and threats, even, in a grand array and paraded them before Nellie. Bob, still with his satisfied smile, helped her out in front of an office, and because he was a clever lawyer, and some little convincer, they went inside.

When it was quite all over, kiss, ring and all, the door jumped violently inward, and Papa and Mama Gray stood framed in the doorway, incredulity frankly written on their faces. When they understood that the damage had been done, Mr. Gray, with a twinkle in his eye, and a familiar deep throated chuckle, wrung Bob's hand with hearty approval. "Knew you two were bound to do it. And good luck to you."

Nellie was weeping on her mother's shoulder. "I got Bobbie's note tonight saying that he was going to marry you down here, and we hurried right down to be in time for the ceremony. Dear, dear, and I have been waiting 20 years to marry you in grand style, and then you had to do it in this dingy little hole. But I was so afraid for a while that you were going to marry Marmaduke!"

And she beamed on the smiling Bob.

Father Stickleback Fish Protects Eggs in Nest

Man does not know at just what stage in the evolution of life parent-animals begin to develop a desire to help their children through the tender and dangerous stage of their lives. We have, however, observed a few instances where the protective instinct is found in animal life as low as the fishes.

One of the most interesting and familiar illustrations is that of the sticklebacks, writes Frances E. Potts in Nature magazine. The males of this group build nests of waterweeds, binding them together with mucous webs or threads secreted from the kidneys. When satisfied with the nest, the male looks around for a mate to occupy it. If he does not succeed in attracting a mate, he resorts to force and drives a female—or several of them—into the nest until he has a satisfactory number of eggs.

After the female deposits the eggs in the nest her responsibility for her children is over. In fact, she would enjoy eating the little fish and probably would do so except for their vigilant father. Never during the period of incubation does he forsake his vigil, often fighting off enemies, and even the female, with the use of the stickles on his back. Not only does he guard his precious treasure, but, with the use of his tail and fins, he circulates water through the nest to provide plenty of oxygen and maintain purity. In case the current spills an egg, or a young fish strays out, he rescues it and returns it to the nest.

There is a marine catfish, the gafftopsail, inhabiting the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, the male of which assumes a remarkable family responsibility. Unbelievable as it may seem, he protects the eggs during incubation by holding them in his mouth. The incubation period may be a full month, and the eggs nearly an inch in diameter; the male may carry at times as many as 50 in this manner, although 25 might be nearer the average. Some scientists maintain that these fish may reach a length of four inches before being thrown out from under the parental roof.

Sick Child May Be Problem to Parents, Doctor

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

JUST as a child learns to have confidence in and a liking for his physician, so also can he have fear and distrust. Certain thoughts or feelings are associated with the visit or sight of the physician and patience and kindness will open the way to the child's trust and confidence.

Dr. Stewart R. Smith, Indianapolis, in the Journal of the Indiana State Medical Association says:

"The general practitioner of medicine can be one of the most profound influences on the emotional life of the children whom he meets. The doctor should know that this influence can accomplish a great deal in helping a sick child to a healthy acceptance of his illness, but if this influence is misdirected it may be a big factor in causing the youngster to be an invalid for life."

Doctor Must Know Parents. To gain full knowledge of why a youngster behaves as he does, the physician must know the child's surroundings, including the type of parents he has. "Arguing with these children is useless, shaming is cruel, and coddling is fatal."

"In dealing with these children, the practitioner might well have unending patience, have faith in the child's ability, try to see the problem as the child sees it, and believe that in every sort of conduct disorder the child is trying to solve some problem."

I believe that parents and teachers before referring a youngster to a physician because of some "odd" behavior could save the time and patience of the physician by asking themselves "Why does he behave this way?" The answer, as Dr. Smith points out, is that the youngster is trying to solve a problem. By patient questioning, parent or teacher or both might learn what is the problem and help the youngster to solve the problem for himself.

Immunization Is Boon to Children

A PHYSICIAN friend of mine once confided the following to me:

"I wish we had lived in a poor and more thickly populated section of the city when my youngsters were small; they would have had all the childhood diseases—measles, scarlet fever, chickenpox, whooping cough—and have become immune to (free from) virtually all ailments, now they are grown."

I do not think many parents would choose this method of "strengthening" their children because the complications from these childhood ailments might have resulted in partial deafness, heart disease and even death.

There is, however, a way of protecting children from many of these diseases. It is called the "immunization" of the children.

In an article by Prof. C. S. Raue, M. D., Philadelphia, writing as guest editor of the Medical World, it is said:

Earliest Immunization. "The earliest immunization procedure is vaccination against smallpox. The best time to vaccinate an infant is between the third and the sixth month. At this age complications are less likely to occur and there is little or no danger of brain inflammation following vaccination."

After the infant is six months old, there should be immunization against whooping cough; it is claimed that 80 per cent of children receiving Sauer whooping cough vaccine will, two to three months after vaccination, be immune for several years.

Nine months is the age to immunize against diphtheria. The horror of diphtheria is almost unknown to young parents today.

The advisability of immunizing against scarlet fever is not fully endorsed by the medical profession; it is left to the physician's judgment in each case.

"There is no vaccine for obtaining permanent immunity against measles, but a child exposed to measles may be protected by an injection of placental globulin.

AROUND the HOUSE Items of Interest to the Housewife

The illusion of depth is created by building bookcases on either side of a wide doorway leading from living room to dining room.

A few drops of glycerin added to the starch will make linens glossy.

Bananas should be ripened at room temperature, never in the refrigerator. They are ready for eating when they are bright yellow all over, with occasional brown spots.

Pillow cases should be ironed lengthwise to be entirely free of wrinkles.

Salt added to potatoes when nearly boiled insures their flakiness and prevents them from going to pieces in the boiling process.

The yolk of an egg mixed with warm water and used as you would soap will remove coffee stains. Hot sudsy water will quickly remove the yellow of the egg.

At The Movies

By Nancy Jane

Next attraction at the Valley Theatre, starting on Sunday will be "Castle On The Hudson", starring John Garfield, Ann Sheridan, and Pat O'Brien, an Anatole Litvak production, released by Warner Bros. Garfield and Miss Sheridan, two of the outstanding new stars of the screen are co-starred for the first time on a torrid love story, tailored to the measure of their dynamic personalities.

Garfield, it will be remembered, came to Hollywood from Broadway's Group Theatre. In his first screen role, "Four Daughters", he portrayed a restless, cynical young musician. He was an immediate hit and bigger and better roles followed upon that one. As for Miss Sheridan, her phenomenal rise to screen fame is pretty well-known to all. From the obscure ranks of beauty contest winners, she rose through the treadmill of "bit roles to featured and finally to starring roles. Vibrant charm combine with red-headed loveliness to make her one of brightest stars on the present Hollywood horizon.

Together, Garfield and Miss Sheridan make a dynamic screen team and "Castle on the Hudson" is an ideal vehicle for them. A turbulent love story of a young couple who risk death to be together, it is a fast-moving drama, full of suspense. Garfield portrays an egotistical young gangster, arrogant in his confidence that his luck will hold. But like most other characters he has a weakness. That weakness is his love for Kay, the role played by Ann Sheridan. Beautiful and desirable, she is queen of the underworld, but her love is all for Garfield. Separated when he is finally apprehended, they cannot stay apart. He comes to her when she needs him most, and she, in return murders another man to save his life. It is this point on which the plot revolves, and to tell how the situation is resolved would detract from the full dramatic impact of the picture.

Also starred with Garfield and Miss Sheridan is Pat O'Brien, while the featured roles are played by Burgess Meredith, famous stage star, Henry O'Neill, Jerome Cowan, Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, John Litel Margot Stevenson, Willard Robertson, Edward Pawley and several other well-known players.

"Castle On The Hudson" is an Anatole Litvak production, released by Warner Bros. Litvak directed from the screen play by Seton I. Miller, Brown Homes and Courtney Terrett, from the book by Lewis E. Lawes.

Connecticut's Boundary

The north boundary of the state of Connecticut has a curious deviation from a straight boundary known as the Southwick jog. The reason for it is that in adjusting errors in the boundary line between Connecticut and Massachusetts as previously run by compass a long, narrow strip of land was given to Connecticut, and the Southwick jog ceded to Massachusetts was intended to be an equivalent area.

Great Britain to 'Fight On, Alone' In Spite of French Capitulation; U. S. Speeds Up Defense Program

(EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

II GERMAN WAR: Honorable Peace

Premier Paul Reynaud of France had often and sincerely pledged that he would lead his country in a "fight to the finish" against the German invader. Thus when the government announced his resignation and the appointment of 84-year-old Marshal Henri Petain to take his place the French people knew without further information that a peace offer was in the offing.

And soon it came. Marshal Petain declared to his people that he was asking the enemy to end the war by giving to France a "peace with honor." Negotiations were immediately begun. While peace terms were being arranged, the badly crippled and out-fought French army was forced to carry on its battle against Germany and Italy even after its leaders had asked for peace.

England meantime was rallying every force at her command to prepare for the next German blitzkrieg. Home defenses were bolstered and a firm resolution held sway over the island center of a world empire: "Even alone, we will fight on."

Prime Minister Winston Churchill declared in a radio address that the British empire would fight on "until the curse of Hitler is lifted from the brows of mankind." British leaders expressed the hope that despite any peace arrangements, that France's resources would not be used against England.

Should Germany gain control of France's fleet (second only to England's in Europe) Britain would have a very serious naval problem on her hands. For the combined fleets of Germany, Italy and France are equal to or stronger than the British fleet. England's effective sea blockade of the axis powers would thus be put to the extreme test.

Russia meanwhile had not been idle. Exactly what the Soviet Union had in mind, few men except Joseph Stalin could be sure, but Russian troops marched into Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia and the governments in these three tiny Baltic nations were being "reorganized" on a basis "favorable to the Soviet."

Italy Itemizes

Egypt broke off relations with Mussolini, and put all her bases at the disposal of John Bull, but Mr. Bull had control of these anyway, even in times of perfect peace.

The Italians flew over Toulon and Malta and Kenya colony, and the allies flew over Turin, Genoa, and Italian East Africa. Some lives were lost, mutually, and some names were called, Mayor LaGuardia of New York (half Italian) taking part in the name-calling himself. Everyone agreed that Italy was hardly heroic, but old-timers remembered Italy's parallel action (in reverse) back in May, 1915, when Mussolini again was war-active.

Spain Stirs

Spain, in the Sixteenth century, was the greatest and strongest of all imperial powers. There was nothing to beat her. Then, like the Romans, she declined and virtually fell. But Dictator-Generalissimo Franco was kicking her into stirring again. Spaniards yelled for the return of Gibraltar in street mobs.

Mussolini and Hitler helped Franco in the Spanish civil war, and his group are duly grateful. When Italy went in, they declared Spain not neutral, but merely non-belligerent, and Spanish-owned Moor troops seized the International Zone (supposedly neutralized) at Tangiers, in North Africa, which is too near Gibraltar for solid comfort.

WASHINGTONIANA: Foreign Policies

Following the President's speech at the University of Virginia, there was a storm. Part of it was a storm of applause by third termites, New Dealers, warhawks. The rest was a storm of protest by Republicans, pacifists, independent Democrats. Senator Wheeler of Montana began to emerge as heir to the laurels of the late Senator Borah of Idaho. He indicated he might break with Roosevelt, if the Democratic party turned into the "war" party. Republicans planned to label the Democratic party by that tag, in the 1940 campaign.

On the other hand, some of the New Dealers wanted to repeal the Johnson act, and Roosevelt's own neutrality act, with its cash-and-carry provisions. France kept making frantic appeals to Roosevelt, and to Americans generally, and this aerial propaganda had its effect. Some Americans went so far as to favor a declaration of war against Hitler, although for the time being, Mussolini was even more unpopular.

The senate passed, by 67 to 18, the presidential policy of trading in government-owned weapons to private corporations, for re-sale to the allies. Old rifles, older ammunition, airplanes; and there was even talk of "obsolete" U. S. naval destroyers, for England to hunt submarines and sea sleds with. U. S. Steel, for example, was reported as planning a $37,000,000 deal, via the war department, for the allies.

The house of representatives passed an increase of 95,000 privates for the regular army, and there was congressional talk of running our armed forces up to a million men, including the National Guard. The house also approved the national defense tax bill, to yield a billion additional dollars during the coming fiscal year, and increasing the national debt limit to 49 billions—a jump upward of four billions.

V Column

Congressman Van Zandt of Pennsylvania demanded that Roosevelt begin a drive against the fifth column here in America. Roosevelt was requested to fire the 563 people listed by the Dies committee, as government employees who belonged to the reddish League for Peace and Democracy. But the fifth column charges became wilder and wilder—each American making up his own list of fifth columnists, and putting on it special grievances. A complete list of "amalgamated" fifth columnists was assembled. It included Republicans, Democrats, third termites, anti-third termites, pro-Germans, pro-Russians, pro-Italians, pro-Britons, aliens, communists, socialists, the Bund, pacifists, "professional" Irishmen, Jews, Catholics, atheists, gossipers, defeatists, parlor pinks, roaring reds, anarchists, pietists, and conscientious objectors. Readers of the column may add to this partial compendium, at their pleasure.

COW'S 'FUTURE' IS PRICE GUIDE

Animal's Age and Productivity Are Important Items.

By DR. GEORGE TAYLOR
(Extension Dairyman, New Jersey College of Agriculture, Rutgers University.)

When buying cows, farmers should consider not only the purchase price but also the age of the animal and the anticipated future period of usefulness.

From the standpoint of maximum milk production, the dairy cow reaches maturity at about five years of age. From this point on, age exerts little influence on the amount of milk produced until the animal reaches 10 to 12 years of age. However, many cows develop udder and breeding troubles before 10 years of age, which terminates their period of usefulness.

The market price of grade dairy cattle is usually the highest at three to four years of age. At this age the heifer has completed one or two lactation periods, thus making it possible to ascertain her general dairy qualities. At three years, the cow has the best part of her productive period of usefulness ahead. After eight years, her market value begins to decline even though she may be at her best in milk production.

On the average, in grade herds in the United States, a cow is milked between five and six years. The replacement rate in this country is considerably higher than in many European countries. Cows in Danish dairies, for example, complete approximately seven lactations compared to five for herds in the United States.

As a basis for a decision as to when a cow is no longer profitable, milk production records as well as breeding records should be kept. Inferior producers and diseased animals should be disposed of regardless of age. High producing cows that continue to be regular breeders should be kept in the herd until they are at least 10 to 12 years old.

Inexpensive Confection Being Made From Whey

"Wheyfers" are an inexpensive new chocolate-covered confection to satisfy America's sweet tooth recently developed by the bureau of dairy industry.

Wheyfers are a light, brittle, porous candy made from the whey, which is a waste product in the manufacture of cheddar or Swiss cheese. The new candy is not cooked but is dried hard and crisp. Its unusual light porous quality is the result of whipping air into sweetened condensed whey.

To make the new candy, sweet pasteurized whey and sugar are evaporated together under vacuum to a thick smooth consistency, and then whipped until light and fluffy. Chopped nuts and cooked cereal to take away any salty whey taste are added. Then the mixture is rolled out in a thin layer and dried. Cut in small wafers the candy is dipped in chocolate to keep it from absorbing moisture and becoming sticky, or crystallizing.

Sweetened condensed whey, the chief ingredient of this new candy, is cheap and simple to prepare, keeps well, and is easy and convenient to use. It is excellent for making chocolate fudge, caramels, taffy, and various mixtures for the center of chocolates.

U. S. Farm Families Are Really 'Well Fed'

Farm families are the best fed population group in the country. This statement was made by Dr. Louis Stanley, chief of the bureau of home economics in the department of agriculture, Washington, D. C. On the other hand, according to the most recent report, village families are the poorest fed, with city families falling between the two.

The difference lies, it seems in the amount of "protective" foods eaten. Farm families consume an average of about 60 per cent more milk, 15 per cent more butter, and 25 per cent more leafy, green and yellow vegetables than small city families, a diet rich in protein, vitamin A, iron and calcium.

Most farm families owe their excellent diets to home production of generous quantities of protective foods. Every household should learn what foods and how much of each is required to furnish a fully adequate diet, decide what to buy, what to raise, and what to can and store for out-of-season consumption.

More of Our Friend Betsy's Attic Magic

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS
HERE is Betsy again— that clever girl in Sewing Book 3, who streamlined an old iron bed. In her house there was an enormous kitchen and her mother hated big kitchens. So, a partition was used to divide it into two rooms. The half with a door into the front hall was for Betsy to entertain her own special friends.

The old linoleum was painted dark green. All the walls were painted cream and then pink stripes were painted on the new wall. The neat and efficient cot cover is cream chintz with pink roses and green leaves. The sides of the pad, the two end cushions and the center cushion are green, lighter than the floor. The cut-down table with the tin tray on top is painted with the green floor paint with some of the cream wall color added.

NOTE: Betsy is now making a hooked rug for her new sitting room from directions in the Sewing Book 5. It also contains directions for streamlining an old couch; rockers; dining room

A gentleman was stranded at a railway station, on his way home to the country, in a heavy rain. Seeing a car at the roadside, he got inside for shelter, hoping to get a lift when the driver turned up. Eventually he reached his turning, so he jumped out. Then he saw a man about to get in, but warned him not to, as "there is something strange about this car—the engine isn't running." The stranger replied: "Don't I know it; I've been pushing the blamed thing for the last two miles."

The donkey was probably first domesticated in the valley of the Nile, where it was known and used for centuries in advance of the horse.

Connecticut's Boundary
The north boundary of the state of Connecticut has a curious deviation from a straight boundary known as the Southwick jog. The reason for it is that in adjusting errors in the boundary line between Connecticut and Massachusetts as previously run by compass a long, narrow strip of land was given to Connecticut, and the Southwick jog ceded to Massachusetts was intended to be an equivalent area.

How Old Are You Inside?
Never mind how many wrinkles Father Time has painted in your face. Never mind how many gray hairs he has put on your head. The important thing isn't how old you are on the outside, but how old you are on the inside. A man's real age is determined by the youthfulness of his spirit! Benjamin Franklin helped write the American Constitution at eighty. Tintoretto painted his famous "Paradise," a canvas 74 by 30 feet, when he was seventy-four.
Goethe completed "Faust" at eighty. As long as we are alert and vital in spirit we are not old. As long as we are joyously looking forward and enthusiastically starting new things we are still young. Stay young on the inside and forget your birthdays!—The Silver Lining.

The demand for Boulder Dam's electric energy and resultant revenues have outstripped all expectations, according to information received by the Office of Government Reports at Phoenix, Arizona.
After three years of power operations at the world's greatest power plant, revenues from which will be enough to pay for the entire cost of the world's highest dam, the world's largest reservoir, and the power plant, the gross income was about $2,000,000 ahead of this anticipated when financial plans for the pioneer among the government's multi-purpose hydro projects were first drawn up. Income for the present fiscal year is expected to exceed $4,500,000 bringing power plant revenues received from July 1, 1937 to June 1940, under Boulder's 50-year power contracts, to approximately $11,300,000.
