No. 50.

QUITAQUE HOME TALENT LYCEUM

The Quitaque High School will offer the first number of their School Lyceum on Saturday night, November 11th.

The program is very entertaining, and a patriotic service will be given at the close.

Everyone is urged to come. Program begins promptly at 7:45.

Earnest Jackson is back from Tulsa where he and his family have been while he was recuperating from an operation for appendicitis.

Little Miss Betty Nelle arrived Friday morning, Nov., 3rd, to make her home with Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Smithee. She is a fine little lady, and weighs 9 pounds.

The Ladies of W. M. U. Circle No 1 will serve lunch at the J. A. Bain building, first door south of Silverton Dry Goods Co., Saturday, November 11th.

Wanted—Some one to work in the Star office. Some experience required. Steady job for some one during the winter months. Apply at once at Star office.

BRISCOE COUNTY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

The Briscoe County Teachers Association met in Silverton school building Saturday, Nov. 4th. The forenoon was devoted to a social "get together" meeting. The Parents Teachers Association served a delicious luncheon consisting of fried chicken, mashed potatoes, fruit salad, cake, pie and coffee. Mesdames Alexander, Meeker, Jno. Burson, Buchanan and Walter Fogerson acted as hostesses.

After lunch the body went into a business meeting. The secretary was absent and there were no minutes of the meeting held in Canyon during Institute week.

The chairman appointed a committee consisting of the principals of each school to collect material for the county annual. Also a committee of censorship: Mr. Tipps, Mrs. Lewis, and Misses Bullard, Bartz, and Degge.

It was decided that the schools of the county would raise a fund for buying medals to be given to the winner in each event listed in the interscholastic league.

Directors of various departments of the league decided to have local contests in spelling, arithmetic and english between same grade pupils of different schools. The county meet will be held in Silverton the first Friday and Saturday in April.

Miss Cameron was elected director of music-memory contest.

Judge Richards made an inspirational talk.

Everyone enjoyed the meal served at noon, and expressed thanks to the women by a rising vote.

Those present were Judge Richards, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lewis, Gasoline, O. R. Tipps and Mr. and Mrs. Platt, Quitaque, Misses Ethel Busby and Ruby Redin, Emmett Hazelwood, U. M. Meeker and the eleven Silverton teachers.

SCHOOL NOTES

The chapel exercises last week were very interesting. Mr. Reynolds started us off right Monday morning by giving us a talk on "Work". Tuesday morning Miss Bartz's pupils had charge of the chapel period. Their readings and piano solos were very good. On Wednesday morning Rev. Fulgham conducted the devotional exercise, and the remainder of the chapel period was used by the Juniors. Otis Patton, president of the class, made a good address, in which he gave the ideas and ideals of his class—worthy to be adopted and practiced by all the pupils of all the classes. Misses Mineola Biffle, Marguerite Dickinson and Nettie Mae Bowen each played a piano solo. Thursday morning we were made to feel very "spooky" when Miss Dison's pupils gave a playlet, "Hallowe'en". On Friday morning Miss Cameron entertained us with a reading, "Penrod Scofield". Misses Welch and Bullard sang a duet.

Mrs. R. B. Braly and Mrs. J. H. White left Monday for Sweetwater in answer to a message that their father, J. L. Cozby, who is there for his health, was very low. He was some better at last report.

W. M. U. Circle No 1 will meet next Tuesday at 2:30 with Mrs. Fulgham.

Circle No. 2 will meet with Mrs. Barney Greenfield. Each member is urged to be present.

Rev. McNeely returned home Monday from Conference which met at Amarillo. He was sent to Channing for the next conference year. Rev. Jenkins of Dumas, will be pastor here.

Miss Maud Burson is visiting her sister, Mrs. Guy Whitacre, who has recently moved to Canyon, from Hale Center.

MAX KARAYS OF THE BIG-B BY STANLEY SIGLER

CHAPTER II VIVIAN COMES HOME

For twelve days Max lay in a comatose state. With all the ruggedness of his strong constitution he fought back death's chilling hands. With a tenacity known only to those who have been reared in the pioneer lands he clung to life.

It was a fight for the right to exist—greater than the one in the canyon. Only an iron constitution and steel nerves would have gone through the battle victorious—yet he won.

Those were anxious days on the Big B ranch. The usually droning household became a hive of bustling men whose one idea was to do all in their power to save Karay's life.

One of the boys went hot-footed after a doctor to the little town of Leon, sixty miles away, and the trip there and back was made in record time.

The doctor remained by his bedside during the fight.

At last it was over. Max came out of the lethargy, opened his eyes, recognized those about him and smiled. His mind was entirely clear, and from that hour he steadily improved.

His days of convalescence were days of rejoicing. And the summer days soon rolled into autumn and winter approached.

December came and found him able to ride, though he was not doing regular work.

One day he was standing in the doorway of the bunk house when he saw Dutch ride up to the porch of the residence and hand Biggerstaff a letter. The owner read it, leaped into the air and yelled like a Comanche Indian.

"Hey, Max, come right over. I have something very important to tell you."

tant to say to you," he yelled.

Max strolled up the path that led from the bunk house to the residence, and into the room the owner used for an office, where he had already gone.

"Did you call me, Judge?"

Max had always addressed him as Judge.

"Called you is right. I have a very important proposition to put to you."

"Shoot, Judge."

I am growing old; the snow of many winters have fallen upon my head; the hot suns of many summers have beat down upon my head; my sun has reached its zenith and started on its downward course. You and I have fought life's battles together, but yours was the beginning, mine the ending.

I have been unfair to you. For fifteen years you have been my dear friend.

"Yet there is one thing I have never told you. I have a daughter, now grown, and you and she are to meet."

Max eyes turned slowly from the low rotund figure with his white head and iron-gray mustache and goatee toward to the almost life-sized portrait hanging on the wall on the wall, and he wondered.

"She has had a good home since her mother died, when she was young and before I knew you, and when I made those annual trips back east it was to see her. Now she has completed her education and is coming to live with me."

"So I have decided, before she arrives, in order to have more leisure to devote to her pleasure, to make you my foreman. I hope you will realize the responsibility of the position, and understand I am placing in your hands my ranch, stock and men."

Vivian says she will be in Leon day after tomorrow, and I want you to meet her there. Be mighty careful."

"Trust me, Judge, I'll be doin' my best," replied Max as he and started out. "Thanks for the position."

A few moments later he accosted Dutch at the corrals.

"Dutch, did you know the old man had a daughter?"

"Did I know? Well I reckon I did! She was here last summer while you was gone—now I've gone and done it; didn't intend to tell you a darn thing about it because you ought to been here an' seen here. Been livin' with her Aunt or somethin, back yander some'eres. She's as purty as a peach, she's a dandy, a regular go-gitter. Big, brown optics, a raffin' at you all the time. All the boys, 'cept me, went crazy over her, an, she just tantalized them all she knowed, how—an' she knowed many a way. How come the old man to mention her?"

But Max was already walking toward the bunk house, leaving Dutch to tell his story to the wind.

Before any one else arose the next morning, Max hurriedly dressed snatched a cold breakfast, harnessed the team and was on his way.

With the long journey before him Max had plenty of time to think, and so he planned every word and act that should take place between him and the girl he had never seen, but who had stirred his soul so deeply, who had troubled the waters of a tranquil life.

His thoughts kept reverting to that life-size picture back there at headquarters. The woman was of medium height, slender and graceful. Dutch said the girl had brown eyes, the picture had brown eyes.

Still he was troubled—did the daughter favor the father or the mother?

So by the time he arrived and the train came in, he had whipped himself into a state of expectancy.

A motley crowd had gathered at the shanty depot to see the once a day train go through.

One passenger alighted. She looked around at the staring crowd, and her big brown eyes revealed her disappointment when she failed to find any one she recognized.

Max advanced to meet her.
