The Forces Of Freedom . . . .

It is estimated that there are more men under arms now than shortly before the Second World War. Save in the Western Hemisphere, there is no real peace anywhere on earth. Violence, disworder, oppression-these are the symbols of the postwar world. And, as revitably occurs in an age of suspicion and unrest, the liberties of peoples everywhere are being limited and destroyed.

The position of the United States in this dark and dangerous time is clear. We, with a handful of allies, none of whom are economically or militarily powerful, are the last citadel of individual freedom. With few exceptions, the English speaking world alone still maintains and respects the basic rights of man-and even in that world there are ominous signs of weakening. The American government, in its dealing with the other powers, is the leader of the forces of freedom against the forces of darkness and the total state.

The duty of the United States is equally clear. To put it in a phrase, this duty is to maintain our strength. And strength can be edivaded into two different and distinct classifications. There is military strength—the strength of force. Much as Americans hate war and thought of war, we must maintain this, in the interest of

Second and still more vital, there is the kind of inner strength which only a free people can possess. This is the heart and soul of a nation and its institutions. It is a nation's greatest resource in time of trial. And it rests upon the proposition that the rights of the individual are inviolate. So long as we have this, we shall be ready to meet whatever the coming years bring

Are you too skeptical about the work of Foreign Missionaries?

During the past 100 years, thousands of men and women of all faiths have voluntarily dedicated their lives to spreading the Good News" found in the Scriptures. Some have been physicians; others have been agricultural specialists; others have been teachers.

What have they accomplished? Any War Chaplain who has served in the battle areas, and tens of thousands of returning veterans, will tell you that Foreign Missionaries have laid the foundation stones for world peace, that they have changed the thinking of millions of people all over the globe, and that they have made it pos-sible for nations to trade with each other with confidence.

When your Pastor, Rabbb or Priest asks you for money to expand the work of some Foreign Missionary, invest as much as you can. Your returns will exceed anything you
