There might be some justification for political domination of medicine if it were the only way to safeguard our national health But every objective survey yet made shows that the health standards of our people are among the best on earth, and are steadily improving. Again, compulsory sickness insurance might be justifiable if there were no other way to protect ourselves for meeting unexpected doctor and hospital bills. But the voluntary plans-of which the largest now has more than 30,000,000 members-have brought this protection within the reach of almost all workers and their families at remarkably moderate demand a clarification of Federal cost. And the fact that the vapower policy after the elections. rious plans are competing for clients assures that the widest range of benefits at the lowest price is provided.

> We must realize that the next ogical step beyond compulsory health insurance would be socialized medicine. That view has been expressed by Senator Morse and others in high positions who have made a study of it. And every country which has tried socialized medicine has run into the same trouble. The overall cost of medical care has gone up -while the standards of medical service have gone down. What else can be expected when the doctor is subjeted to the politican and the bureaucrat? The examples of other nations should alone be sufficient to block every scheme that would endanger free medicine in this country.

World supply will keep pace with world demand if several assumptions work out. The most important is that crude oil can be refined and shipped where it is needed. There must be peace in the great producing areas of the world. Enough equipment must be available for drilling and expanding crude production to meet the goals. Refining capacity must be increased, particularly abroad. Tankers must be built; oil pipe lines must be laid.

Editor, 75, Who Published Frank Newspaper, Dies

LAMAR, MO. - Arthur Aull, the Missouri editor who printed the ungarnished truth about his neighbors -and won readers the world around

The 75-year-old publisher of the Lamar Daily Democrat died after more than a year of illness which kept him from the cluttered office in which he had printed the hometown news for 47 years.

He thought a scandal aired died quicker than a scandal carried by whispers. So he aired them.

"It's hard to beat honesty and truthfulness in getting along with people," he often said in explaining why, despite his writing, he never needed a buggy whip or a revolver

Knew His People

The way Lamar mourned him was proof that he knew his people. He was explicit about domestic affairs, operations and crime. Suicides and murders were often written as if he were an eyewitness. After his daily forenoon visits with farmers, merchants and loafers on the town "square," Aull would return with items like these: "Bill Doakes hasn't had any liquor for a good long time. The big reason is that whisky sells for money and Bill don't have any." "John Doe was divorced from his wife, Ella, at the courthouse Tuesday. Mrs. Doe ran off with her brother-in-law while her husband and children were at church."

He often said that any country editor could handle the news the way he did, but he warned "to said that reports of good ployers in commmerce and indus- avoid being lynched they had better know their people pretty good before they start anything."

Told of Beating

One of his most widely read stories was his account of how an irate woman subscriber had beaten him with an umbrella. His headline

"WE CERTAINLY GOT ONE

BLOODY HEAD." His long account of an ordinary dog fight, ended with this observation: "It was a swell fight. The owners being sore at each other gave it extra drama.'

Aull bought the Democrat in 1900 with a capital of $200. "I didn't know a thing about the newspaper business when I bought the paper," he once said, "but I had something to say, and I wanted to say it in my own newspaper."

McCORMICK-DEERING

Tillage Tools must be plenty rugged to stand the tough job of preparing seed beds. They muss also be soundly engineered to do the job right You'll find both characteristics in McCormick-Deering Tillage Tools.

Take, for example, the rear gaags on the No. 9-A tractor disk harrow. Notice how they we "cross-draft" connected That shows real engineering "know-bow." The rear gangs en't skid in tough soils or en turning corners. They're always in position to split the ridges ahead and give you a 100 per cent job of disking.

It's that way all through the entire line of McCormick-Deering Tillage Took. You'll find weight where weight is needed - quality construction and sound engineering. Each and every tool can be depende upon to do its job right.

Come in and see the los lasting, good-working McCa mick-Deering Tillage Tee
