Survivors include his wife and four children, Bo, Jane, Jim and Carol Ann, all of Muleshoe, four brothers and three sisters.

Selections will be made on the basis of the individual's leadership and achievement record in 4-H, length of membership, production records, participation in community, county, district and state 4-H activities and the general all-round record book to be submitted by each contestant.

Copies of the bulletin are available at county extension offices—county agents. Just ask for the new bulletin on building pastures. At the same time why not start making plans for improving the pastures you already have on the farm.

Miss Effie Lookinbill and Mr. Crow were married in 1920. Survivors are his wife, a daughter, Mrs. Carroll Kreig, Hereford, his mother, Mrs. Alice Crow, Tulia, three brothers, Hoyt of Tulia, W. ## Release From Texas State Teachers Association

Austin, Texas, June 25, 1952.—Despite the fact that Texas teachers have not had an increase in their base salaries since 1949, they have continued to improve their professional training. They now rank among the five top states in the nation in teacher preparation, according to Charles H. Tennyson, executive secretary of the Texas State Teachers Association.

Tennyson said that figures available from the Texas Education Agency show that more than 95 percent of the state's 58,513 public school teachers now hold degrees from accredited institutions of higher learning.

During the school just closed, only 2,299 or 4.5 percent of the white teachers in the state did not have degrees. Only 146 or 1.84 percent of the Negro teachers in Texas do not have degrees.

The school year 1951-52 also marked progress in another direction, Tennyson added. It was the first year in the history of the state that the schools did not have some people teaching who had less than a high school education. The previous year 34 such people were employed as teachers.

AGRICULTURAL FEEDERS

Home grown feeds, especially pastures and other forages, are the cheapest and best feeds for dairy cattle. Using a silo for storage is one of the best practices dairymen can follow—"canned pasture," that's a descriptive term for silage, should be included on every dairy cow's menu at certain times during the year.

Educational awards provided by the Santa Fe Railway System will go to 15 outstanding Texas 4-H club members this fall.

Last year 18,610 families in 146 Texas counties were given assistance in improving family relationships by Agricultural Extension Service personnel.

Farmers and stockmen interested in building better pastures can add a lot of mighty good information to their files by asking the local county agent for a copy of B-197, Building Pastures.

Everyone can make contributions to fight against popio. A clean up campaign should be the order of business around every home. Get rid of flies, mosquitoes and other insects by destroying breeding places. Sanitation is of utmost importance. Use insecticides to keep the pests under control. Don't wait until tomorrow to start the fight, for even today may be too late.

Let 'Junior' Help With Dinner Dishes, Say Psychologists

CHICAGO—It seems that child psychologists in America are overwhelmingly in favor of "Junior" helping with the dinner dishes. However, how "Junior" may feel about it is entirely another matter, they agree.

In a nationwide survey, a parents' consultation service asked psychologists whether or not they thought "little boys should be expected to do simple domestic chores such as setting the table, helping with the dinner dishes, etc."

More than 88 per cent of the 388 respondents, numbering among them some of the most distinguished personages in the field of child psychology, answered "yes" to the query.

Only 5 per cent said "no," and four per cent did not reply to the question. The remainder had "other opinions," which means that they failed to check either the "yes" or "no" answer. Instead, they relied on the "further comments" column to clarify their position on this vital issue in the lives of little boys from homes without maids or automatic dishwashers.

A small number of the respondents, the majority of these male, took refuge in the immemorial dodge that dishwashing, bed making, dusting and similar tasks were "woman's work" and therefore psychologically unfit for the proper conditioning of little boys for manhood.

These favored "more masculine chores" for the boys in the family, particularly where there were girls around "to help with the dishes."

SOS That Saved Couple Was Transcontinental

ESCANADA, Mich.—A Chicago radio "ham" and his bride honeymooned here after a plea for help that spanned the continent and brought their rescue from an upper peninsula snowdrift.

Rudolph Fleischer, 32, and his bride, the former Marilyn Sinclair, 22, of De Pere, Wis., spent four anxious hours near the Rapid river fire tower before Michigan state police arrived in answer to the call sent out by Fleischer over the 14 watt transmitter in his car.

The couple had driven eight miles off a main highway on a sightseeing tour when the car got stuck. Not dressed for hiking, Fleischer sent out his message which was picked up by a radio amateur in Portland, Ore. The message was relayed to Washington, D.C., and back to Lansing, Mich., and thence to state police in Escanaba.

Fleischer said he and his wife would stay in this "wonderful country" for the rest of the week.

False Postmark Fools Roaming Hubbies' Wives

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Lewis McLaughlin operates a letter remailing service for out-of-town customers.

People everywhere mail him letters along with instructions where to send them.

McLaughlin then recalls the stamped, addressed letters so they bear a Columbus postmark. The people who receive them are supposed to think the letters came from Ohio's capital city.

McLaughlin said some practical jokers take advantage of his remailing service—and other such services throughout the United States—to make their friends believe they're on an expensive vacation tour.

And then, he added, there's the roaming husband who wants his letters remailed from Columbus so his wife will not know his actual location.

McLaughlin has received letters for remailing from 46 states, Canada and Mexico.

"I only charge a quarter a letter, and I really don't make any money on it," he said, adding "it's a heckuva lot of fun."

McLaughlin says postal authorities know of his remailing service and haven't objected.

For the police, he records every piece of mail he handles.

Student Shuns Freedom, Demands Jail Sentence

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M.—Carlton M. Owen, 23-year-old Williamston, S.C., college student, faced a sentence because he refused to accept a verdict of acquittal on a draft law violation charge. He insisted he should go to jail.

A jury in Federal court, after deliberating 10 minutes, found the defendant guilty.

Owen volunteered to serve as a government witness against himself after Judge Carl A. Hatch directed a verdict of innocent on the ground that the Government had failed to present sufficient evidence to convict.

The student said he thought the selective service act "a wicked law in that it requires me to become a part of an organization based on principles very foreign to me." He said he had not registered with selective service.

"I think as long as that law is on the books the place of a man who opposes it should be in prison to show where he stands," Owen said.

Little People Should Never Be Annoyed

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Nighttime is the time for the little people to be abroad, dancing their dances, doing their work and repairing damage done by ordinary people. Nowhere is this better known than in Ireland. There the little people are household familiars. There many floors are not swept between sunset and sunrise for fear of dusting the tiny guests out the door, and there food is left by doorstep or heard when ordinary people go to bed.

Ireland's little people are mostly benevolent, even helpful, and guilty only of innocent mischief, such as keeping butter from churning, or teasing horses in the stables.

Not to be Crossed

But the little people are not to be crossed, be they leprechauns, the shoemakers and keepers of treasure in the fairy world, or any of their numerous kindfolk.

A captured leprechaun, if held firmly and looked straight in the eye, has no choice but to tell the location of buried gold. But he is tricky, and can always divert attention. When his captor glances away—as the little man will make him do—the leprechaun disappears, no matter how firmly he is held.

There is a recent news story of a leprechaun mound on the grounds of a housing project near Limerick. Workmen ordered to bulldoze the mound refused. They had no desire to disturb and displease the little people.

Outside workmen were called in and soon had the hill half removed. That night the mound was rebuilt. The newcomers then wisely abandoned the job, and the project was built around the mound.

The workmen were only following their good Irish sense, and custom of long standing when they refused to level the mound. None but the most callous or unmindful will disturb the haunts of the little people, be they mounds or lone thorn trees—"fairy trees."

Respect for the little people is not confined to Irish workmen. A dignified professor of geography at Queen's University in Belfast wrote: "A venerable thorn, pink-flowering, stands under my window as I write and casts its shadow into the senate room of the University. But no one will remove it or even lop off its branches, and the story goes that when the buildings were being erected the plans had to be changed in order that the thorn should not be interfered with."

Land Refused

Padraic Colum, the Irish poet, in "The Road Round Ireland," tells of an agricultural laborer who refused ground offered him for his own farm because there was a "fort" or mound on it, "and on no account would he interfere with the fairies' home."

Not all people of the other world
