Cotton Farmer is Having His Share of Trouble Starting the 1956 Cotton Crop

At this time many Briscoe County farmers are either planting their cotton over or many others are poisoning cotton insects. This spring has been very unfavorable for cotton in Briscoe County. First there was the drought that prevented many farmers from planting and then the rains caused much cotton to be replanted because winds have caused severe damage of washing and covering up a great deal of the cotton.

Thrips have invaded the stands of growing cotton to a degree that has never been seen before in this county. The thrip is a very small insect that feeds on the juices from the under side of the leaf. Thrips cause severe damage to the plant by stunting the growth and delaying the early fruit set. Thrip damage is easily detected by the cupping up and browning of the leaves. Severe damage may be seen on larger leaves by silvering on the under side. Thrips are usually less than 1-8th inch long and about the size of a needle.

Thrips are easily killed with many insecticides. Toxaphene is a favorite because of its easy action on beneficial insects in this stage of cotton development. Dieldrin and Heptachlor are also recommended.

One field of cotton that was poisoned the evening before the rain was checked on Saturday and the results were good. Farmers should plan to put on two applications of poison to do the best job of controlling the thrip to insure early fruiting and prevent severe damage. These applications should be spaced a week apart, reported County Agent Ledbetter.

Deep Tillage and Pasture Burning No Aid to Moisture

College Station, June 7.—Moisture infiltration into the soil, an important factor in crop and pasture production in limited rainfall areas of the Great Plains, evidently is unaffected by deep tillage and adversely affected by burning over native grasses, reports the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Jack Barton, extension soil and water conservation specialist, says the results of tests conducted in Kansas in 1952 disagree with a widely held theory that deep tillage with chisels and subsurface sweeps improves soil moisture storage. Neither the amount of moisture infiltrated nor the yields of wheat produced was improved by deep tillage in these tests. Soil types studied included a fine sandy loam with a distinct plow pan, a silty clay loam with a tight subsoil, a clay loam and a very fine sandy loam with a clay pan.

Barton says the research workers also found that when native bluestem pastures were burned over, the soil quickly lost its ability to absorb or take in large amounts of water. Under conditions of simulated rain, unburned bluestem pastures absorbed water at a steady rate for nearly 80 minutes. Water absorption by burned-over soil dropped before the end of 20 minutes.

Very dry unburned pasture sod absorbed 4.6 inches of moisture in the first 10 minutes and 4.4 inches for each succeeding 10-minute period until after the end of 70 minutes. Similar but burned-over sod absorbed 4.7 inches of moisture in the first 10 minutes, 3.4 inches the second 10 minutes and only 3 inches in the third 10 minute period.

While pasture burning is not a common practice in most sections of Texas, Barton points out that the Kansas tests should further strengthen the case against pasture burning and the need for protecting pastures against fires of all kinds.

The cavern is a popular attraction for tourists and sightseers, especially in the summertime, because it is a real cool cave. The temperature inside remains at a comfortable 64 degrees even in the hottest summer weather. Longhorn Cavern is located off U. S. Highway 281 four miles south of Burnet.

REGULAR MONTHLY MEETING OF F. F. A. WAS JUNE 11

The regular monthly meeting of the F. F. A. was held June 11 at the agricultural building on Monday night.

The main business was about the coming July State Convention and possibility of entering a float in the V. F. W. Rodeo parade next week.

A special committee of next year officers will meet Monday night, June 18, to decide on the float.

A summary of the mosquito stories told by the boys would win any tall tale contest. Sammy Turner especially had a tall one to tell. It seems two mosquitoes stole his calf, but when they came back after the old cow he caught 'em, and has them harnessed to pull a plow and thus saves gasoline.

Hints Offered on Hay Making Practices By E. M. Trew

College Station, June 7.—The quality of the hay crop can be materially affected by practices employed in connection with cutting, curing and storing, says E. M. Trew, extension pasture specialist.

Quality of the crop is affected by the stage of growth of the hay plants at cutting time. In general, Trew says, the younger the crop at cutting time, the higher the quality but the lower the yield. Therefore, he adds, the crop must be cut at a stage of growth that gives the best compromise between yield and quality.

The best stage for cutting Coastal Bermuda, says the specialist, is when the plants are 16-18 inches high; for common when the plants are in the early bloom stage; for bluestem, boot to early bloom; American grass and Sudan, boot stage; sorghums, hard dough stage or later.

For legumes, Trew likes to cut alfalfa when the plants are in the tenth to a fourth bloom stage. Cowpeas when the first pods turn yellow and before the leaves begin to drop; Sericea lespedeza when 12-15 inches high; sweetclover in the bud stage just before blooming and vetch in full bloom.

As for curing, Trew says the usual practice in making legume hay is to cut, wilt and windrow the plants. Windrowing is necessary to prevent the loss of leaves. Grasses may be left in the swath after cutting until almost ready to bale. Curing of both legumes and grass should be completed as quickly as possible to preserve quality; sunlight, rain and dew lower quality. Over curing results in losses of leaves, nutrients, dry matter and color. Undercured hay, however, is high in moisture and often heats, molds and spoils. Hay usually can be safely baled and stored when the moisture percent is 18 or lower.

Mechanical drying insures the least loss of nutrients and color, says Trew. Another practice which offers some advantages over baling is chopping and storing loose. The entire crop is cut then picked up with a forage harvester and chopped into 3 or 4 inch lengths. The chopped hay is blown into a truck or trailer and is stored loose in the barn or stack. It may be self-fed and thus labor saved.
