Social Security Benefit Claims Should Be Proven

We who handle claims for social security benefits sometimes find cases where real hardship results because people who believe they are entitled to old-age and survivors insurance benefits are not able to prove their entitlement.

If you were to write the social security law and regulations, I believe you would require that certain conditions of entitlement be met before benefits would be paid. Many employed or self-employed people pay into the social security insurance fund and regulations must be observed to protect the fund from those who would not rightfully be entitled to benefits.

If it is a widow claiming benefits, it must be established that she is actually the widow. A marriage certificate is the logical proof to be expected. A birth certificate of a child will show his age and prove that he is a child of the person on whose social security record a claim for benefits is being filed. Since the law requires anyone claiming retirement benefits to have reached age 65, some evidence is needed to show that the person is actually that old.

While the social security office does have a responsibility of protecting the old age and survivors insurance system against unjustified claims, the purpose is not to try to keep those rightfully entitled from getting their benefits. Our advice to the families of those working persons whose tax contributions go towards making up the social security trust fund is this: Obtain proofs that may be needed before they are needed. Find out if your marriage is actually on record and see if the births of your children are recorded. Get some evidence of your age. Be armed with this information when the time comes to file a claim for benefit payments under the old age and survivors insurance program.

A number of books have been added to the Silvertton Library recently. A nice collection donated by the Wright children of which we are very thankful. Among them are the following: Price of Foxes, by Shellabarger; Sweeper in the Sky, by Wright; Jubel's Children, by Kaufman; The Fortunate Wayfarer, by Oppenheim; This Side of Glory, by Brestone; The Cry of the Covenant, by Morton; Seventeen, by Tarkington; Five volumes of History of Texas, by Wortham; Nine volumes of The Worlds best 100 Detective Stories, and a number of others.

Trappists Put Famous Bread on Commercial Market

BERRYVILLE, Va.—Trappist monks at the Holy Cross Monastery here have put their famous bread on the commercial market in the suburbs of Washington, D.C. 60 miles away.

Called the "Monk's Own Loaf," the bread forms one of the staple parts of their meatless diet. It is dark, firm bread made of whole-wheat flour, honey, nonfat dry milk solids, butter, white flour, yeast, sugar, salt, shortening and soy flour.

Brother Kevin, baker for the Monastery, uses three per cent soy flour in the bread formula. Soy flour is 40 to 50 per cent protein, so the bread supplies protein which the monks miss in their meatless diet.

Wrapper on the bread shows clerical wit and whimsy. Small figures of monks are shown hoeing in the fields, running with shocks of wheat, milling flour, milking cows, pumping water, kneading bread, baking and eating.

Bread is only one of the many things they make for themselves. As members of the Cistercian Order, they attempt to be economically self-sufficient and to produce within their cloister as many of their needs as possible.

The Cistercian Order traces its founding back to Saint Benedict in the Sixth Century, although it went through a reformation in the Eleventh Century.

The modern commercial bread program, still on a very small scale, was fostered by a retired physician who discovered that the bread was for sale. His enthusiasm among his friends was the major "sales force."

Humidity Too Low In Average Home, Experts Report

CLEVELAND—The sweltering, over-hot humidity of summertime is always well remembered. The equally uncomfortable condition of too low humidity in the home during winter is seldom recognized, however.

It is a surprising fact, but the experts say that the average humidity in most homes during the winter months is less than that present in the Sahara Desert in summer and the home might just as well be right in the middle of the desert!

This is the reason, they say, that many household objects dry out in the wintertime. This "thirsty" air tries to supplement its moisture deficiency by taking moisture from walls, furniture, plants, books, woodwork, rugs, draperies, and even from occupants.

The reasons for the absence of moisture in the air of the home are these: The colder the air is, the less moisture it can hold. Cold outside air in the winter can hold only a small quantity of moisture, even when nearly saturated.

This cold, dry air leaks into the house at the rate of from 1/2 to 1 1/2 house volumes per hour, depending on how tightly the structure of the house is built. The air on entering the house is heated and becomes capable of holding a much greater amount of moisture. This makes it "thirsty" air, and it will soak up moisture off of every object in the house.

Proper humidity in any home may be obtained by addition of a humidifier to the present heating system.

Tough Customer Is Heart Muscle

NEW ORLEANS—How tough is the heart muscle?

Considerable reserve strength was found in the heart muscle of experimental animals given stress tests after induced "heart attacks," according to research reported by Dr. Thomas N. P. Johns and Bryon J. Olson of the National Institutes of Health.

First, the investigators reported, they developed a method for producing standardized and sizeable areas of heart and muscle damage in rats and other small experimental animals by tying off a main coronary artery with surgical silk. This created a situation parallel (but not necessarily comparable) to a heart attack, technically a coronary occlusion or coronary thrombosis.

Next the animals were subjected to different types of exercise at various times following the occlusion. Approximately 400 animals were used, including a controls group whose chests were opened but whose arteries were not tied off.

Exercise during the first six hours following coronary occlusion produced a significantly higher mortality in the experimental rats, the scientists found. But after this "shock period" had passed there was "no significant difference in exercise tolerance" between the rats with the damaged hearts and the rats in the control group.

Atomic Guards Ordered To "Shoot to Kill"

CAMP HANFORD, Wash. — Orders of "shoot to kill" were issued soldiers guarding the Hanford atomic works from an elusive enemy that has been nibbling at the roots of the supersecret installation.

One man in each battery of the anti-aircraft group was issued a .22 caliber rifle and told to keep shooting until the enemy is destroyed.

The highly-mobile intruder is commonly known as the jackrabbit—in fact there were hundreds of jackrabbits when the order was issued. The bunnies nibbled the post's 100,000 rose bushes down to 10,000 and chewed away most of Hanford's grass and shrubs.

Expectant Father Lost In Rush to Hospital

DETROIT—Charles Birchfield was driving along hurriedly when he spotted two rookie policemen walking their beat. Screeching to a stop, he shouted excitedly that his wife, Opal, was about to have a baby in the back seat of the auto.

Patrolman Edward Krajewski quickly slid behind the wheel. His companion, Patrolman Gaylord Golding got in the back seat to assist the expectant mother. Then they sped off—leaving the prospective father stranded on a curb.

Mrs. Birchfield got to the hospital ahead of the stork.

Bad Bill

MIAMI, Fla.—B. M. Funderburk received a letter from a non-existent local firm notifying him payment was due on a note he didn't owe. He was puzzled until he looked at the postmark. It read Dec. 10, 1940.

Funderburk then remembered that he had paid off the note 15 years ago and the firm went out of business a short time afterwards.

Many Worry About Heart Needlessly Since Ike's Attack

MINNEAPOLIS—Out of many thousands of worried people seeking examinations by heart specialists, two out of every three persons will find they have been worrying over false symptoms mistakenly associated with heart ailments, says the medical department of a large insurance company.

Since the President's attack, many specialists report a sharp increase in requests for heart checkups. This is a wise precaution; if one's heart is impaired, the earlier this is discovered the better the chances of complete cure. If it is not impaired, a particularly destructive worry is the fact which has itself ultimately caused many serious nervous troubles and actual organic ailments.

Chest pains, either dull or sharp stabbing variety, do not necessarily indicate a heart condition but may result instead from a score of other causes, such as digestive disturbances, nervousness, a rheumatic condition of the spine, or neuralgia of the chest muscles due to a cold. A prompt medical examination should be undergone, however, as the symptoms may indicate some condition which calls for treatment or a change in personal habits, even though the heart is not involved.

"Fluttering" heart sensations and skipped beats often alarm people, particularly at night, but these are commonly the result of over-eating, alcohol, tobacco, coffee or colic, indigestion, fatigue, or indigestion, particularly in the younger age groups. Here, too, a change in personal habits, as advised by a physician, may be all that is necessary for relief.

Early Map Guided Columbus' Voyage

WASHINGTON—Christopher Columbus first sailed to the New World by a map.

It was a chart of the Atlantic with the "Spice Islands," Japan, and the continent of Asia on the western side. Curiously enough, it was not a bad representation of the West Indies, Cuba, and the eastern shore of North America, considering that the man who drew it was working entirely from conjecture and vague rumors. He was the Florentine physician and cartographer Paolo del Toscanelli, who had sent his map to the discoverer of the New World 12 years before the first momentous voyage.

A map showing the actual journey of Columbus through the Bahamas is a feature of an exhibit at the U.S. National Museum, Smithsonian Institution, illustrating with original materials the life among the historic tribes of Latin America. A notable part of the exhibit is a reconstruction of a Lucayan-Arawak village on the present Long Island in the Bahamas, called Fernandina Island after Columbus.

Motorist Wins Right To Drive 1926 Auto

HAGERSTOWN, Md.—A 63-year-old motorist defended and won the right to drive his 1926 Oakland which he says will continue to operate until "it falls apart."

It started when the car ran through a red light. Patrolman H. M. Snyder said the brakes of the 29-year-old vehicle were inadequate. Owner John Luipersbeck said it wasn't so.

The policeman said he tested the brake pedal and it went clear to the floor. Luipersbeck said the Oakland had mechanical brakes and was not moving when the officer tested it.

Drained Moonshine Trapped by Officer

CHATTANOOGA—When Chattanooga agents raided the home of Renfro, they reported, Renfro tried to dispose of his moonshine by the time-tested method of pouring the stuff down the sink.

What Renfro didn't know, the officers added, was that Chief Deputy Herbert Grant was waiting with a jug at the other end of the drain.

Renfro was held for grand jury action on bootlegging charges.
