J. H. Cowart, 87, Plainview, Died December 21

J. H. Cowart, 87, Plainview, brother of C. L. Cowart, Silvertown, died December 21, following a heart attack at his home, 1107 Amarillo street, Plainview.

Funeral services for Mr. Cowart were conducted at 2 p. m. Monday at the Lemons Funeral Home Chapel.

Rev. R. R. Gilbreath of Amarillo, formerly of Plainview, a retired Methodist minister, officiated.

Interment was in the Lockney Cemetery.

Mr. Cowart was born April 23, 1869 in Grayson County. He came to this area at the age of 21, settling near Lockney in 1890. In 1901 he moved to what is now Lamb County and resided in the Olton vicinity until 30 years ago when he and his family moved to Plainview.

Mr. Cowart was appointed county clerk for Lamb County in 1908 and was a member of the Baptist Church. He was a farmer until his retirement several years ago.

Survivors are his wife; two daughters, Mrs. M. F. Van Pelt of Crystal Cove, California, and Mrs. Ruby Newsam of Oakland, California; three sons, Loyd and Henry Cowart, both of Olton, and Lee Cowart of Midland; 10 grandchildren, 11 great grandchildren, and one brother, C. L. Cowart of Silvertown.

Official Survey on December 18 and 19, Shows Following

Contacts were made with the various gins in the area which this office serves on December 18 and 19, says the Texas Employment Commission. The figures were tabulated with the following ginnings reported by the gins from these counties:

Briscoe	11,690 bales
Floyd	92,413 bales
Swisher	43,793 bales
Hale	196,809 bales

These figures will vary some from the official U. S. Department Agriculture report which will be made later due to the fact that these figures include remnants, also these figures do not give the break out of the ginnings which were brought in from other counties.

1956 Food Buying Cuts Deeper Into Family Budget

WASHINGTON—Americans are eating more food during 1956.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture notes that there is continued high demand for food as consumer incomes continue high and that food supplies at least are as large as last year, with retail food prices averaging about the same.

In view of these prospects, good consumption will probably be a little larger, both total and per capita.

Spending for food is expected to go up, too. The average person probably will spend more dollars on food, though the share of his income going to groceries will likely continue to be about 25 per cent. The increased spending is expected to result not only from using a little more food but especially from buying the highly processed products that save preparation time in the kitchen.

Stocks of food were at their peak at the beginning of 1956 and the number of livestock on farms the largest since the end of World War II. This indicates continued heavy supplies of livestock products.

As compared to 1955, the average person this year will probably eat more beef, pork, fluid milk and chicken meat and slightly less veal, lamb and mutton. Consumption of butter and other manufactured dairy products, eggs, turkey meat and lard is expected to remain about the same as in 1955.

The average person will probably use more processed vegetables and also more vegetable cooking and salad oils; and about the same amount of frozen fruits and juices.

Lenient Fathers Men of Personality

BERKELEY, Cal.—Men who are more lenient toward strict in their attitudes toward child-rearing also appear to be in better psychological health, seem to have more pleasant personalities, and probably make better fathers a University of California psychologist believes.

Dr. Jack Block arrived at these conclusions in a study at the Institute of Personality Assessment and Research.

The fathers he studied were selected from a sample of 100 men who were participating in a larger research project at the Institute. All were given a specially constructed test that distinguished between subjects with different attitudes—“restrictiveness” versus “permissiveness”—toward bringing up children.

Dr. Block chose 20 high-scorers (restrictive) and 20 low-scorers (permissive) to be studied more closely.

Life More Secure Than In 'Good Old Days'

NEW YORK—Life was much more secure for American wage earners and their families last year than it was in “the good old days” of forty-five years ago. Little more than one-third as many deaths occurred in 1955 as would have been the case if the mortality conditions of 1911 had continued to prevail.

This is based upon the experience among the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's millions of industrial policyholders. During 1955 there were about 112,000 deaths reported among these insured. If the death rates had been the same as in 1911 there would have been 304,000 deaths, which means that 192,000 deaths were postponed during the year because of the reduction in mortality.

Despite outbreaks of respiratory disease early in 1955, and the intense and protracted heat waves during the summer, the death rate among the policyholders last year continued at the alltime low —6.2 per 1,000—which was established in 1954.

Army Still Relies On Horses and Mules

CAMP HALE, Col.—Mules and horses are still in the Army and playing an important role in the Army's cold-weather and mountain training program at this 9,500-foot installation.

The Army said the 308 mules and a few horses of the Fourth Field Artillery Battalion and 35th Quartermaster Company are often the only way to bring supplies and food to the 3,000 men living in this subzero country.

They are the only two mule-pack outfits in the Army.

Doubling Up

MILWAUKEE—Police here recently had the problem of dealing with a woman accused of making her salary go twice as far by cashing both her pay check and the stub. She paid for groceries by endorsing a check stub, police said. It was thought an innocent mistake until police discovered that she also cashed the check.
