...And the kitchen sink

MIAMI - Wondering what ever happened to that old Jacuzzi you dumped by the beach?

Try checking with the Center for Marine Conservation, which has completed its tally of the items its volunteers found last year during a cleanup on Florida's coastlines.

Among the most unusual: two Jacuzzis, a baby carriage filled with pornographic books, keys from the Department of Corrections, three kitchen sinks and the top to a wedding cake.

Also picked up were 41,813 glass beverage bottles; 243,424 cigarette butts; 25,135 foam cups; 8,607 pieces of clothing; 2,969 six-pack holders, and 1,263 condoms.

Class ring reappears

PERRYSBURG, Ohio - It's taken more than 15 years - and the help of five people - but Larry Shepard Jr. has his high school ring back.

The Perrysburg High School graduate, who now lives in Westerville, lost the ring in the early 1980s while a business student in Texas.

An unidentified man with a metal detector found it and gave it to a friend's grandson. That boy turned it over to another friend, Jose Arroyo, an eighth-grader in Pasadena, Texas. Arroyo's teacher, Jennifer Land, who had lost her own ring, suggested he try to find the owner. Land found Perrysburg High School's home page on the Internet and sent e-mail with a description of the ring.

The Perrysburg band director looked up his roster of students who graduated in 1980 and called Shepard's parents, Carol and Larry, Sr., who moved back to Perrysburg from Texas 10 years ago.

"I was just really, really flabbergasted," he Larry, Jr. said.

Recent storms also carry downside for area farmers

AMARILLO — Rain and hail last week were a mixed blessing, say Texas Agricultural Extension Service personnel out helping farmers assess crop damage in fields with either mature wheat or very young cotton.

It's the young cotton that appears to be in jeopardy right now, according to Dr. Brent Bean, Extension agronomist at the Texas

A&M Research and Extension Center near Amarillo.

Some producers are already calling the specialist about replanting an alternative crop.

"With the weather cooperating, there might be just enough time to get in and get something else in the ground," Bean said.

The cutoff date for cotton planting for insurance purposes was June 1 for many of the Panhandle counties that grow it.

Bean said one of several crop alternatives could follow cotton, such as sorghum, soybeans, sunflowers or dry beans.

"Sorghum planting may range from late April to early July, depending on the maturity class of the hybrid," he noted.

In general, a medium- to full-season hybrid should not be planted after June 15. The cutoff date for a medium-maturity hybrid would be June 20 through June 30, while short-season hybrids could be planted up to July 10, depending upon the hybrid and how far south in the Panhandle or South Plains the field is located.

Sizable crowd observes Memorial Day

By RONN SMITH
Editor

A crowd estimated at up to 150 gathered Monday at the Bailey County Cemetery to honor the area's veterans and witness the unveiling of a historical marker at the site.

The familiar "Taps" and a haunting a cappella version of the national anthem by Cydni Vandiver set the mood, and Curtis Shelburne delivered a message appropriate to the occasion.

Shelburne emphasized that devotion to the nation is different from devotion to individual leaders, "who sometimes mislead."

He related his reaction to viewing Tom Boutelle's photographs from Vietnam to illustrate his point of separating the nation from its leaders.

"It was so stark to me that you had the Viet Cong in that situation, who didn't care how many people died," he said.

"And then you had the United States there trying to help," he added, saying that U.S. troops were pictured giving inoculations to children and providing other community services. "I really appreciate what this nation has always stood for."

David Wyer, president of the Bailey County Cemetery Association, introduced Joy Snyder Young of Tucumcari and other members of the Snyder family including descendants of the first baby born in Bailey County.

He said the cemetery contains 17 individuals from the Snyder family, spanning five generations.

Muleshoe schools lead way in technology offering

By RONN SMITH
Editor

The Muleshoe Independent School District has led the way for area schools to enter a high-technology computer training program, and the payoff for students could be considerable.

Don McElroy, the district's technology director, said Thursday that he and his colleagues discovered the Cisco Networking Academy Program on the Internet and thought it would be a good program for the district.

He said Superintendent Bill Moore, the district's representative on the Region XVII board, called attention to the program at the regional service center, which then decided to help make the program available region-wide if districts other than Muleshoe were interested.

Mike Richardson, assistant technology director, said nine school districts signed up for 1998-99, the first year the program was in use here.

He said he has heard that as many as 15 districts across the region are interested in beginning the program this fall.

They would join 1,549 local "academies" in all 50 states plus the District of Columbia and 31 other countries, according to material provided by Cisco.

The four-semester Cisco program aims to teach students about computer systems from the inside out; if the student can then pass a certifica-

Jennyslippers find historic vein

Saturday's reopening of the Mule-Putt Miniature Golf Course under management of the Jennyslippers just happens to roughly coincide with the 16th anniversary of the facility's dedication.

The May 1, 1983, issue of the Bailey County Journal carried a story about opening of the course, located just east of the Bailey County Coliseum.

Saturday's event is to feature a cookout as a fund-raiser for the Jennyslippers as well as remarks by dignitaries and a flag ceremony featuring local Scouts.

Gates are to open at 5 p.m. and the opening ceremonies are scheduled to start at 6 p.m.

The 1983 ceremony doesn't sound that different from the one coming up. Included were:

- Remarks by Mayor Charles Bratcher and County Commissioner Raymond Scott;

- Introductions by Police Sgt. Wayne Holmes, vice president of the Muleshoe Youth Activities Association, which originated the idea for the course;

- Prayer by the Rev. Brock Sanders of Richland Hills Baptist Church; and

- Presentation of a trophy to R.A. Bradley for the months of work he put into getting the course open.

The course property is now owned by Bailey County, and commissioners have committed funds to help get the course presentable.

Fund established to help former Muleshoe teacher

A fund has been established at Muleshoe State Bank for a former longtime Muleshoe English teacher who needs a liver transplant.

Johanna Wrinkle, now living in Victoria, Texas, has been placed on the waiting list for a liver.

The transplant is necessary because of the progression of Hepatitis C, which she contracted via blood transfusions more than 20 years ago.

The waiting period for the surgery varies, depending on the availability of a matching organ. Preliminary tests and paper work have been completed, according to local organizers of the aid drive. Securing a replacement liver could take as long as a year.

Once everything is ready, the surgery is to be performed within a matter of hours at Hermann Hospital in the Texas Medical Center at Houston.

The American Liver Foundation encourages prospective liver transplantees and their families to seek financial aid from their "extended families."

The patient receives 100 percent of donated funds.

Expenses for the surgery and the first year of follow-up care are estimated at $314,000. Most of that amount will be covered by insurance.

also a member of the Texas Historical Commission, spoke of her interest in historic cemeteries.

"Cemeteries of all ages are a link to the past and a chance to look to the future," she said, adding that the care given a community's cemeteries can be an indicator of the pride that community takes in other areas. More than that, she added, cemeteries represent a record of people and "their efforts in an area."

Johnson also expressed appreciation for the local efforts on behalf of the old cemetery, "bringing it to the attention of the state and saying, 'Yes, this is a historic piece of property worthy of state designation.'"

Student suspended in poison ivy attack on science teacher

WESTERVILLE, Ohio - An eighth-grader was suspended for the rest of the school year for rubbing poison ivy on her science teacher's chair.

The teacher, Tom Northrup, did not develop a rash. Angela Pham, 14, got a 10-day suspension, beginning Monday, for violating the district's policy against the use of a weapon. The girl did it because she believed the teacher treated her differently because she is Asian, said her mother, Angie Pham.

Robert Schultz, principal of Heritage Middle School, said the district's definition of a weapon includes a dangerous object or chemical.

Varying watermelon crop can be more satisfactory

By RONN SMITH
Editor

Most of us are such creatures of habit that we aren't going to change those habits much, even if "the way we always do it" isn't the best way — or even, rationally speaking, a good way.

That's just as true in the garden as anywhere. When it comes time to plant vegetables, most people figure out how much of a particular thing they want or need, and then go out and plant that much.

That made sense for some vegetables when housewives had schedules flexible enough so they could do almost full-time when the corn or the tomatoes — or whatever — got ready.

Today, with most women working jobs with imposed schedules, it leaves me scratching my head that people still plant in big batches rather than planting a little of each thing at a time, so the crop can be popped in the freezer a little at a time and be fitted into busy work schedules.

And frankly, with such things as watermelons, I never understood why the crop shouldn't be spread out over several weeks in the first place.

Why should you have three weeks in August when you have more watermelon than can be consumed by your family, the neighborhood and a couple of nearby towns — and then do without through the fall?

By planting manageable crops at two-week intervals, you can space out the ripening at a usablepace — maybe.

Of course, in a climate like ours there's a limit to how far you can stretch out the melon harvest; most years it isn't going to last much more than a couple of months at best.

Most people around here (on the cusp of USDA zones 6 and 7) favor planting watermelons in the open ground about the first week of May, the same time tomatoes and other tender plants can be set out or planted.

If you want to get the longest possible season, try planting some next year about April 20. You can use row cover to help bring them up if the weather continues to be too cool.

You can expand this further by starting a few seeds indoors about three weeks before you intend to set the plants outside.

The main direction for extending the melon season, however, is into the fall.

Assuming you make a planting about the first of May, you can plant a few more in mid-May, the first of June, mid-June and the end of June.

Those all ought to have time to mature crops. Some years, you can plant another crop about mid-July and have it make. In fact, that's the advice given by Jerry Baker, "America's Master Gardener," in his excellent book, Jerry Baker's Fast, Easy Vegetable Garden.

Baker states that if your average fall frost date is Oct. 20, you can plant watermelons until July 20.

That sounds true, allowing for a 90-day growing period. It probably would be reliable in zone 6-7 climates at lower altitudes and with more humidity.

You may recall, though, that last year we had a month of extremely cool nights before we had a real frost. Melons appeared to stop maturing after about a week of those cool nights — so gambling on the late crop didn't pay.

That shouldn't discourage you from trying a few late melons if you're interested in experimenting, though. When things go right, you get those delicious melons right up to frost, and if you get tired of them you can carry the remainder inside where they'll keep until Thanksgiving or beyond.

Most people probably still rely on the Black Diamond variety of watermelon, and you can't go wrong with it for a main crop.

For the late ones, though, you might want to try some of the quickest-maturing varieties.

Sugar Baby and its "relative," Garden Baby, mature in about 76 days so they're generally safe for planting very late. The melons are small, in the 6- to 8-pound range, but that just makes them easier to store in the refrigerator.

Flavor-wise, my brother — who will always be a fan of Black Diamond — pronounces Garden Baby "just as good as the big ones."

Sugar Baby was developed from a type that appeared in 1955 at Geary, Okla., not that far east of Amarillo, so it's well-suited to our climate.

Keep in mind, too, that these little guys are going to be much easier to carry out of the field, if toting is going to part of the harvesting chores.

Also easier to carry but still sizable are the elongated (as opposed to round) types such as Charleston Gray (85 days), Allsweet (90 days) or Jubilee (90 days).

The reason these long ones are easier to carry is that the sides do present a "flat" surface rather than being all rounded. Growing some of the new super-big varieties can be fun until you have to tote them a quarter of a mile, and then the fun stops. Been there, done that.

I'm all for growing 150-pound watermelons again, when somebody develops a variety that comes with handles on it.

Many people today also forget that watermelons used to come in colors other than red-meated. There's renewed interest in yellow- and orange-meated varieties, although the white-meated ones may never catch on.

The most beautiful color in yellow-meated watermelons, I think, is a variety called Sunshine (75 days). It's small enough to qualify as an icebox melon — 8 to 10 pounds being about average.

Among the orange-meated types, New Orchid (80 days) is hard to beat — although I don't know where the name "orchid" comes from. This is also a small-fruited type.

No discussion of watermelons these days would be complete without mentioning the resurgence in popularity of the variety called Moon and Stars. Ten years ago, if you wanted seed of this variety you'd have had to go to someplace like the Seed Savers' Exchange to get it. Now, even some of the most commercial mail-order catalogs include it. The reason for its popularity is simple: Gardeners finally figured out that watermelons of the supermarket type are bred for tough skins or long shelf life or something of that type. Our ancestors mainly selected for flavor.

Moon and Stars (named for the pattern of light-colored markings on its dark skin and even on the vine's leaves, which may look diseased until you get used to them) comes with flesh in bright pink or yellow, and a rarer orange form. No one knows where Moon and Stars came from. William Woys Weaver, author of Heirloom Vegetable Growing, says it's believed to have developed from Black Diamond. If Weaver says so, then I believe that is "said" to be true, but Moon and Stars certainly bears little resemblance to Black Diamond. At any rate, the story goes that in 1981 a gardener named Merle Van Doren saw the founder of Seed Savers' Exchange on television, called him up and told him about this old variety of watermelon that had been grown in Van Doren's garden for ages. Within 15 years, it was one of the most popular watermelon varieties among home gardeners. Weaver says he has found the variety listed in a 1926 seed catalog, but there seems to be little doubt that it was never before as popular as it is now. Happy planting! Questions can be addressed to Garden Writer, Route 2, Box 880, Muleshoe, Texas 79347.

tion exam, he or she can become eligible for jobs in the computer industry paying $30,000 or more right out of high school, Richardson said.

He stressed that even if the student is not interested in computers as a permanent career, such a job could easily pay for a college education in some other field.

The program's first semester concentrates on the fundamentals of computer networking, learning standard protocols and constructing a network.

Richardson said that in Muleshoe's case, that meant that the students were involved in installing the computers that are being used in the program — even down to doing the wiring.

He said Muleshoe had seven students complete the first two semesters (out of 10 who began the program), and all seven signed up for the final two semesters that will be offered next year.

In addition, eight new stu-

Horse Liniment Eases Arthritis Pain

OCALA, FL -- An ingredient derived from hot peppers that decreases inflammation in racehorse's legs, is now recognized as safe and effective for human use. The ingredient has been formulated into a product called ARTH-Rx™ and comes in a strength designed for humans. Researchers are excited and say the formula can relieve arthritis pain for millions.

Developed by the Phillips Gulf Corporation, ARTH-Rx is a breakthrough in the treatment of painful disorders ranging from minor aches and pains to more serious conditions such as arthritis, bursitis, rheumatism, tendonitis, backache and more.

Although the mechanism by which ARTH-Rx works to relieve pain is not totally clear, scientists suggest that pain is relieved because ARTH-Rx intercepts the messenger substance that sends pain signals to the brain.

ARTH-Rx is available in a convenient roll-on applicator without a prescription. According to a spokesperson for the company, due to the overwhelming demand for ARTH-Rx, supplies are sometimes limited. ARTH-Rx can also be ordered by calling 1-800-729-8446. *1999 PCC ARTH-Rx is available locally at:

dents have signed up to begin the program next year.

Richardson said he has a sort of "you don't want to do this" conversation with each potential student, telling them about the program's accelerated pace and the amount of work to be covered. That's just to be sure the students realize what they're getting into.

He said Thursday that during the course of the first year, students often commented to him that the program should be offered as an advance-placement course with college credit, and he said it's possible that may be an option in the future.

Richardson himself is having to take classes to stay ahead of the students. He leaves next week for a class in how to teach the second year of the Cisco program, and has to take refresher courses regularly to keep up with technological advances.

After Richardson gave a brief presentation on the program to school board members Monday night, Board President Cindy Purdy told him, "We certainly appreciate you taking that risk for our kids."

Richardson says that although the program's pace is stressful for students, the intellectual challenges and the financial incentives generally keep the students interested.

"They can see that carrot out there, that dollar, and that makes it a pretty self-motivating class," he said.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Ruling may harm rural phone users

A decision last week by the Federal Communications Commission affecting telecommunications services provided by Five Area Telephone Cooperative and West Plains Telecommunications will hurt local consumers who are looking to expand and improve telecommunications services.

The decision by an FCC staff official denies a petition filed in 1995 by Five Area and three other Texas cooperatives that had purchased local telephone exchanges from GTE.

Five Area and the other cooperatives requested permission to calculate their universal service support by including the costs associated with the newly purchased exchanges.

Denying the request, the FCC expressed its concern with the impact of this increased support on other telephone companies. Instead, the FCC ruling provides increased support to GTE because of a quirk in the rules which presumes that GTE still owns the exchanges after they have been sold.

"We made a common-sense appeal to the FCC," said Steve Kraskin, attorney for the cooperative in Washington, D.C. "This decision is inconsistent with the federal telecommunications laws adopted by Congress and, in fact, the FCC decision is just not very good common sense."

According to congressional mandate, universal service support is to be used to ensure access to telecommunications and information services in all regions of the nation, including rural and high-cost areas.

Five Area demonstrated to the FCC that it would use the funds for just that purpose.

Yet after two years of considering the request, the FCC decided instead to increase GTE's support for areas it no longer serves despite the requirement that this support only be used to provide universal service.

This decision harms consumers in the rural area who need expanded and improved telecommunications services, but nevertheless Five Area will make every effort to continue our long tradition of providing excellent service to our subscribers."

"Sorghum may be a particularly good choice for dryland due to this year's excellent soil moisture. Early-to-mid-June is a good time to plant dryland sorghum," Bean said.

The agronomist advises producers to check with the seed company for the recommended planting date for a particular hybrid.

For those who plant late sorghum, midge infestations and other insects may be a problem. Plan ahead for insecticide applications, if needed.

Farmers who opt to plant sorghum after cotton should be concerned with herbicide carryover. Treflan, Prowl, Caparol, Cotoran, Karmex and Staple soil residues all can injure sorghum.

"This is especially true on sandy soils, where residues could be relatively deep in the soil due to the recent rains," he added. The agronomist suggested the problem of soil residues can often be avoided in heavier textured soils with a buster planter set to displace the top 4 to 5 inches of soil to establish a herbicide-free seed zone.

If Dual herbicide has been applied, safened seed can be planted directly into the treated soil with little risk of sorghum injury.

According to Bean, some cotton producers have used Staple; however, sorghum is very sensitive to even small amounts of the compound's residue.

It is not recommended that sorghum be planted in fields treated with Staple.

Farmers in irrigated areas might also consider soybeans, the agronomist said. This crop requires about 80 percent of the water needed to grow corn for top yields. However, a good soybean crop also can be grown under limited irrigation.

Dryland soybeans can be produced, but rainfall in late July and in August will be needed. Also, the optimum planting date is prior to June 5.

Once soybeans are in the ground, yield potential is reduced about 0.5 bushel for every day past about the middle of June.

"However, soybeans can be planted as late as July 10 and make a crop," he said. Since soybeans are sensitive to day length, late planting usually results in short stalk growth and may lead to poor harvest of the lower seed pods.

By planting on narrow rows and increasing the seeding rate, the soybean plant can be encouraged to set pods higher off the ground.

"Between the 10th and 20th, I would go to an early- to medium-maturing group IV soybean. As you get closer to July 1, select an early group IV or late-maturing group III soybean variety."

Bean advised.

Seeding rate for irrigated soybeans should be around 150,000 seed per acre if planted with a planter, or 190,000 seed per acre drilled. Herbicide residues of Treflan, Prowl or Dual will have no effect on soybean, the agronomist noted.

If Caparol, Cotoran or Karmex has been used, at least 3 or 4 inches of soil must be removed before establishing a seed furrow.

The agronomist suggested if Staple has been applied, farmers should consider planting an STS soybean variety.

Another alternative crop is sunflowers. The crop can be planted as late as mid-July and still make a good yield. This may be an especially good alternative for the dryland farmer.

If one summer irrigation can be made, water from budding until two weeks after first flowering. This is the critical period when stress on the sunflower plant should be avoided.

"Fields treated with Treflan or Prowl shouldn't pose a problem for sunflowers," he said. However — like soybeans — if Karmex, Cotoran, Staple or Caparol has been used, 3 to 4 inches of soil should be removed before planting.

While sunflowers are also more tolerant to Staple than soybeans, some injury may still occur.
